U. S. OFFICER ON UNOFFICIAL VISIT TO GENEVA TO SEE LEAGUE AT WORK

Major Churchill, Assistant Intelligence Chief, Will Study Military Commission—Was Not Ordered There, He Declares.

MILD STIR AMONG EUROPEAN DELEGATES

Brazilian Representative Vigorously Supporting Resolution to Make Manufacture of Munitions a State Monopoly.

GENEVA, Nov. 27.—The arrival here today of Maj. Marlborough Churchill, assistant chief of the military intelligence division of the general staff of the American Army, who, so far as appears now, has no real significance except to himself and his department, has caused a mild stir in League of Nations circles.

The United States has been on the lips of almost every spokesman in the assembly of the league and probably in the minds of every delegate. The hope that the United States will some day join the league is unmistakable. The entire work of the assembly has visibly been directed so as not to prejudice the most important questions at issue regarding the league covenant, and so as to leave the way open for the United States to have her say in its eventual revision.

The appearance during this assembly of any official or unofficial representative of the American Government was the last thing hoped for. Maj. Churchill, consequently, was all the more an object of attention when his presence here became known.

Visit "Entirely Unofficial." Maj. Churchill emphasized the fact that his visit was entirely unofficial. During the afternoon, Maj. Churchill conferred with the American members of the league's secretariat and also with Col. Requin of the French military delegation in attendance here.

Maj. Churchill probably will see the British and other military experts here for the assembly before leaving Geneva, the middle of next week. He explained he was on a tour of inspection of the American military attaches in Europe, and came to Geneva to find out the manner in which the military commission was organized and become acquainted with the activities of the assembly regarding intelligence work and other military questions.

The United States, Maj. Churchill said, is interested from the standpoint of the future, and naturally is anxious to know what has been done or may be accomplished in a military way by the league.

Maj. Churchill said he had not been ordered to Geneva by either the War or State Department, but thought he had a good opportunity to obtain valuable information for the United States, inasmuch as he was at Bern inspecting the military attaché's office. He stated that he might report to Washington on his visit to Geneva.

The subcommittee considering the admission of new members has been unable to complete its work on account of objections to both Bulgaria and Austria by neighboring states. Rumania, Greece and Yugoslavia still are standing out against Bulgaria, while Czechoslovakia has not yet consented to the admission of Austria. The reasons given by the objecting states are much the same as those presented by France.

Suggestions were made to the representatives of the objecting states today that, in view of the advantages they derive from the peace treaty, continued obstruction on their part would be likely to attract unfavorable attention.

For State Monopoly. The subcommittee on armaments today continued hearing arguments in favor of the resolution introduced by Dr. Gaston de Cunha of Brazil, making the manufacture of arms and munitions a state monopoly in every country. This proposition is gaining ground among the delegates, it being held that much of the tendency to provoke hostilities would be removed if all possible private profit from the manufacture of war materials should be eliminated.

Sweden Files With League Treaties Made With U. S. Recently

GENEVA, Nov. 27.—The first American treaties to be filed with the League of Nations were put officially on record today when Sweden presented the text of two agreements with the United States. The first of these, signed Oct. 18 last, is in the form of a proclamation by President Wilson extending the copyright law of 1909 as applied between Sweden and the United States.

The second treaty cancels articles 11 and 12 of the Consular convention between Sweden and the United States, making them terminate March 18, 1921. The treaty was signed June 18, last.

Under the covenant of the League of Nations the various countries must file all treaties and agreements made since Jan. 10 of the present year, even those in which the other contracting party is not a member of the league.

The arrival of the first American treaties, although they are minor ones, was an occasion of considerable interest among the league members and officials.

A total of 41 treaties and agreements have so far been filed with the league by the various members. Of these, 15 were filed by Great Britain, 11 by France, four by Sweden, six by Switzerland and 15 by other nations. Germany, although not a member, has filed voluntarily nine treaties, two of which are with Soviet Russia.

ATTEMPT MADE TO BLOW UP NEW APARTMENT HOUSE

Three Charges of Dynamite Set Off in Basement of Building at Buckingham Court and Euclid Avenue.

THREE CHARGES FAIL TO GO OFF

Owner Unable to Explain Incident—Non-Union Labor Built Structure, but He Denies Any Trouble.

An attempt was made to destroy a three-story apartment building, construction of which has almost been completed, at the southwest corner of Buckingham Court and Euclid avenue, when three charges of dynamite were set off in the basement of the building at 10:30 o'clock last night.

The explosions, following each other in rapid succession, aroused guests of the Buckingham Hotel and Buckingham Annex as well as other residents in the neighborhood. Policemen from the Newstead Avenue Station found three other charges of dynamite, the fuses of which had burned out before reaching the percussion caps, in the basement.

The dynamite had been set against supports of an I-beam which extended along the entire width of the building beneath the first floor. The supports where the explosions occurred were loosened but the cross beam was not moved.

Vincent Chiberg of 800 Eastgate avenue, owner of the building, when notified at his home of the explosions, told the police that he could not estimate the damage until he had inspected the building. He said he had no idea what had inspired the attempt to wreck the building. It had been constructed by non-union workmen, he said, but he added that there had been no labor dispute over the work.

Buckingham Court runs west from Euclid avenue, between West Pine boulevard and Laclede avenue, and extends almost to the rear of the Buckingham Hotel Annex.

Following the explosions the police received numerous telephone inquiries from persons living in the vicinity of the apartment house who had heard the noise and who wanted to know what had happened.

LODGE FAVORS ARRANGEMENT WITH DOMINIONS ON ASIATICS

Says Canada, Australia and New Zealand Face Same Danger as United States.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 27.—An "arrangement" by the United States with Canada, Australia and New Zealand in regard to Asiatic immigration was advocated by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts in an address at the Union League Club Pioneers' Day exercises here tonight.

"We have heard a great deal about leagues and agreements," said the Senator. "There is one arrangement I should like to make very much, and that is an arrangement with Canada, Australia and New Zealand in regard to Asiatic immigration. Their danger is the same as ours, and the shadow hangs darkest over Australia."

$23,977 RAISED FOR HOSPITAL FUND BY SALE OF TAGS

Amount Is Greatest Ever Recorded on First Day of Collections, and $3800 More Than Last Year.

COLLECTIONS IN CHURCHES TODAY

Last Year's Total of $51,147.68, Second Largest—Aggregate Income Since 1893, $856,139.22.

The collections of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association yesterday, at 95 stations in office buildings, theaters, hotels and other public places, reached a total of $23,977.30. This is the largest amount ever received on Hospital Saturday, and is $3500.92 more than the receipts on that day last year, which were $20,476.38. In 1918 the amount contributed on Hospital Saturday was $21,045.69.

Collections will be made today in churches and Sunday schools. Boxes distributed among industrial and mercantile establishments are expected to furnish an amount as large as the collections in buildings, or larger.

Yesterday's collections were made, like those of former years, by women and girls stationed in the entrances of the office buildings and other establishments, who solicited contributions from persons not already reaching the round yellow tags of the Association, stamped with the red cross. Each giver received a tag, no matter what the amount. Flowers were sold at fixed prices, usually from $1 up.

The total number of contributors yesterday was 90,366, as compared with 73,320 on Hospital Saturday last year. This increase resulted in part from the fact that there were 28 more collection places than last year.

The largest return from a single place was that of the Railway Exchange Building, which was $1551.84, or $144.02 more than last year. The Hotel Jefferson, with $142.96, led the hotels as it did last year. The Bridge was $1691.91, which is $275.68 less than last year's total at the same place. The Merchant's Exchange had contributions of $1236.86, or $82.61 more than last year, and the Hotel Jefferson, with $142.96, led the hotels as it did last year.

Collections by Stations.

POLICE CLEANUP FORCE SEIZES LIQUOR IN HOME

Champagne and 246 Quarts of Whisky Taken From Residence at 4201 Evans Avenue.

The new Cleanup Division of the Police Department, in the second raid since its creation to rid the city of crime, last night confiscated 60 quarts of champagne, 246 quarts of bonded whisky, 12 quarts of Scotch whisky and 14 jugs of wine in the home of Jacob Melshelmer at 4201 Evans avenue.

This was the first confiscation of liquor in any home by the Police Department since the advent of prohibition, except confiscations made since the creation of the new Cleanup Division.

The raid followed a tip to the police that liquor had been taken in and out of the house. A watch maintained until 11 o'clock last night failed to detect any visitors.

At that hour, Detective Sergeants Kelly and Walton, aids of Capt. Stinger, head of the Cleanup Division, rang the door bell at the house and were admitted by Melshelmer. The liquor was found under a canvas covering in the attic. When questioned, Melshelmer declared that he was a former saloon keeper and that the liquor was his saloon stock which he removed to his home when prohibition became effective.

Mrs. Melshelmer appeared at that juncture and in response to questioning said that the liquor was the property of her husband, E. Hopkins, a former Leonard avenue resort keeper. Melshelmer then admitted this to be the fact. Mrs. Hopkins said that Mrs. Hopkins recently had gone to New Orleans and had removed the liquor from a flat at Academy and Easton avenue to her home for safekeeping. Melshelmer was arrested.

DEER AT LARGE ON EAST SIDE

Handsome Animal Reported Seen in Vicinity of Edwardsville.

A handsome deer, running at large on the east side, is attracting interest of farmers and villagers. The animal was seen in the vicinity of Edwardsville a number of times last week.

It was first reported north of Moro Wednesday, then several miles east of Bethalto. Yesterday a large J. Miller, who lives three miles north of Edwardsville, reported that he got it into an inclosed lot, but that it later broke out. He thinks it weighs about 275 pounds, with fine spread of horns. The animal is down from the North, as Wabash engineers two weeks ago reported that they had seen a deer running across the fields near Taylorville, 65 miles north of Edwardsville.

WOMAN DIES AT FOOTBALL GAME

Wife of Col. Wilcox Collapses Before Start of Army-Navy Contest.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—While entering the grand stand before the Army-Navy football game today, Mrs. Mary Wilcox, wife of Col. Cornelius DeWitt Wilcox, professor of modern languages at the Military Academy at West Point, died before reaching her box.

Mrs. Wilcox, accompanied by her husband and several friends, came to the game in a private car. She was taken ill in a jam against the grand stand stairs. She suddenly collapsed. Col. Wilcox left the field with the body, accompanied by several cadets, who gave up the game to show their esteem.

"Presbyterian Debt of Honor."

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Assurances that the $1,000,000 Presbyterian fund for the Inter-Church World Movement will be paid promptly and that December 10 will see the "Presbyterian debt of honor" wiped out were emphasized by Presbyterian leaders in a statement issued at headquarters here today.

PARLIAMENT CLOSED TO PUBLIC; BARRIERS IN LONDON STREETS

Carson Says Britain Alone Can Deal With Ireland

LONDON, Nov. 27.—SIR EDWARD CARSON, the Ulster Unionist leader, has declined an invitation received from the Committee of 100 in the United States which is giving hearings on conditions in Ireland, asking him to attend sessions of the committee's commission of seven in Washington. Today he sent the following reply to the committee's cablegram:

"I have received your cablegram inviting me to attend some American commission in Washington and testify on conditions in Ireland. As far as I can ascertain such commission has no mandate or authority from the British Government, which alone has the right to deal with the internal affairs of the United Kingdom. I feel certain that all true Americans who desire close friendship between their country and ours will resent such unwarranted interference with the affairs of a foreign, friendly state. I must, therefore, decline to accept your invitation."

Passports for Ireland to be Issued Only to Individuals.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The State Department will issue no passport to any committee of American citizens going to Ireland or any other country for research or investigation. This was made clear today by officials in reply to questions concerning the issuance of passports to members of a subcommittee of the Committee of One Hundred which has been asked to visit Ireland and England and make an investigation on the ground.

Any American citizen who has a legitimate reason for going abroad may apply for and receive a passport. He may give as his reason a desire to engage in research work. Where a reputable citizen gives such a reason the State Department will not go into an unnecessary unusual development may follow.

Up to date the State Department has not recognized, in any way, the Committee of One Hundred, and will not recognize any subcommittee. Passports are never issued to committees or individuals, but always to individuals, and the difference is made in the merits of every individual case.

If it should develop that a subcommittee of the Committee of One Hundred goes abroad as individuals, the British authorities will have the right to pass upon their passports, and to withhold issue for any reason considered by them sufficient. In that event the State Department would be unable to assist members of a subcommittee in any way.

Members of the committee today denied reports that in addition to passage money and expenses, Mrs. MacSwiney, widow of the late Lord Mayor of Cork, is to receive $1000 a week while in the United States. They also denied that E. L. Doherty had contributed $200,000 to pay the expenses of the committee.

MOVE BEGUN TO END SALE OF PRODUCTS CONTAINING ALCOHOL

Manufacturers Unite in War on Beverages Offered as Medicine.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—Plans which it is hoped will drive from the market the manufacturers of medicines and toilet articles of such high alcoholic percentage that they are used as beverages were completed tonight by the Proprietary Association, comprising more than 200 manufacturers of proprietary medicines.

The manufacturers agreed to gather evidence of violation of the law by medicine manufacturers and pledged "their full resources to aid the Government in driving out of business the firms which are selling beverages as medicine."

The action was taken after the Government asked that something be done to curtail what was termed "the enormous withdrawals of alcohol from warehouses."

AUSTRIAN LEADER ASKS U. S. TO SAVE STARVING NATION

6,000,000 Inhabitants in State of Complete Insensibility, National Council President Says.

PEACE TRIALS WORSE THAN WAR, HE SAYS

Expressions Obtained by Alexander Konta, Former
St. Louisian, Who Married Daughter of Lemp.

By ALEXANDER KONTA.
VIENNA, via London, Nov. 27.—
Dr. Welschkirchner, president of the Austrian National Council, received me today and, through the New York World, and the Post-Dispatch made a pathetic appeal to Americans for help in rehabilitating his country.

"Before I became president of the Austrian National Council," said Dr.
Welschkirchner, "I had been Mayor of Vienna for many years. I know that city from top to bottom, and I can assure you that those public and private persons from abroad who have come to Vienna to investigate the actual conditions have obtained only the most superficial insight into the actual conditions of the city and the people."

I asked him his special opinion of these conditions.

"We are in a state of complete insensibility," he answered. "We belong to a great nation of many millions of inhabitants. Today we are 6,000,000. Not even Germany has been plunged into such a deep abyss. It is two years since the war ended and we are still victims of the terrible misfortune which overtook us."

Grateful to Americans.

"I am glad," the president of the National Council continued, "to express the World and the Post-Dispatch the sincere, grateful Vienna feels for the really generous assistance America has rendered us since familiar with the name of Hoover, in the hearts of our children that name has taken deep root and will not be forgotten in the history of the new Austria. Thanks to the unbounded generosity of America, hundreds of thousands of Austrian children have been saved from the depths of misery."

"I ought to tell you that as a people we are not accustomed to beg for alms. So we find it hard to be obliged to ask for foreign assistance. I am sure that our kind benefactors in America will not take any offense at this statement for life to every one of us would scarcely be worth living if we were certain that the conditions now prevailing would be permanent. It would not be difficult to render us even truer assistance. Generally speaking, up to the present, there have been plans, proposals, advice, promises, and alms by which I mean gifts and food credits, but there should be something more—America ought to help us to earn our own living."

"The present system of alms is good, but it paralyzes initiative to work. It would be advantageous from the commercial point of view to help us to get in motion once more the international wheel of circulation. I think we have a right to speak in this manner, for it is no fault of ours that we are in this state of misery."

Treaty More Draconic Than War

Referring to the peace treaty with Austria, Dr. Welschkirchner said: "A leading French journalist, a few days ago, spoke of it as one of the greatest stupidities of the present century. I will go so far as to say that Austria is the victim of international diplomacy which was devoid of judgment regarding the consequences of its action. The diplomats seem to have borrowed a rule and pencil from Lenin and Trotsky when they drew upon the map the lines of the new borders of old Europe. In five years the war did not cause as much destruction as the peace treaties have done in two. Austria is the victim of diplomatic faults which can be studied from the ruin of this country."

"What do you expect from the League of Nations, now that you have applied for admission to it?" he was asked.

"We expect no immediate help," he replied. "We are not deceiving ourselves with hopes that may not be realized, for we know to what extent the league has been criticized in America. However, we, a small, weak nation, have to work on given heels. What we have to do is to escape from imprisonment caused by the ban of international proscription. The sentence of 'guilty' of the outbreak of the great war was passed upon us at St. Germain. This is the reason we have been treated as a nation of lepers, compelled to live a life of penance on the outskirts of the civilized world. Look League Membership."

"On our side we are convinced that European imperialism was guilty of the outbreak of the war. If we are admitted to the League of Nations we must think for a moment that we shall demand that the peace treaty be torn up and that the diplomats draw the outlines of

Official British Report on Last Sunday's Assassinations in Dublin

Embassy Gives Out Detailed Recital of Killing of Officers and Former Officers in Raids on Their Lodging Places.

By the Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The British embassy has given out the following regarding the killing of British officers in Dublin last Sunday:

"The following is an official report issued by the British Government on the murders perpetrated by Sinn Feiners in Dublin on Sunday. There were eight raids made by members of the Sinn Fein murder gang, which resulted in 14 men being killed and six being injured, including one Sinn Fein. Four of the murderers were caught red-handed. The details of the murders are as follows:

"Case A, 28 Erliford terrace. One murder. The murderer's leader rang the bell and asked the maid for Col. Fitzgerald. She disclosed the whereabouts of the bedroom of Col. Fitzgerald. The leader then called on about 20 men, who were placed in position in the hall. The leader entered Fitzgerald's room. The maid heard his shouts and the assassin's voice say, 'Come on.' Four shots were fired into him in rapid succession. The police found the body in a pool of blood. The head was shattered with bullets, there was another through the heart and one through the wrist, which had been held up to ward off the attack. All the shots were fired at point blank. Fitzgerald was unarmed, and was the son of a Tipperary doctor, who had been recently employed as defense officer at the police barracks in Clare. Some time ago he was kidnapped by Sinn Feiners, who tried to shoot him with his own revolver, which miraculously missed fire. They then twisted his arm until it was dislocated, dragged him to a field, propped him against a wall and fired at him. He leaped over the wall and escaped, and had come to Dublin for surgical treatment for his arm. He was only a few miles from hospital before he was assassinated."

Four Men Captured.

"Case B, 22 Lower Mount street. One murder. Two further murders resulting near by. House bell was rung and as the maid opened the door 20 men rushed in and demanded to know the bedrooms of Mr. Mahon and Mr. Peel. Mahon's room being pointed out, they entered and five shots were fired immediately. A few inches apart. Mahon was killed. At the same time other Sinn Feiners attempted to enter Peel's room. As the door was locked 17 shots were fired through the panels. Peel escaped unhurt, and the assassin, another servant, hearing the shots, shouted from an upper window to a party of officers who had left Bergar's Bush Barracks to catch the early train, southward."

These officers at once attacked the house after dispatching two of their number, temporary Cadets C. A. Morris and Frank Garnish, to their rooms for a revolver. The men chased the assassins through the house and captured one, whom their fire had wounded, and three others, all of whom were armed. Reinforcements on arrival were asked as to the whereabouts of Morris and Garnish. They replied: 'We know nothing—they never arrived at the depot. We came on hearing the firing.' Search was made and the bodies of Morris and Garnish were found by a Red Cross nurse, lying in a neighboring garden. They had apparently been intercepted by the murderers' pickets, who led them to the back of the house, placed them against the wall and murdered them. Morris lived at Mitcham, was a Lieutenant, Machine Gun Corps, with which he had served in France. He was aged 22 and Garnish had 15 years' service in the army and lived in Hull. The brutal circumstances of these officers' deaths caused great indignation among their comrades. Mahon on the previous night had told Peel to be especially watchful as he was being followed."

Three Shot When in Bed.

"Case C, At Brimla, 117 Northampton road. Murder of one officer and two civilians just before 9 in the morning a party of between 12 and 20 armed men knocked at the door and it was opened by a boy of 10 years, the son of Mr. Smith, the householder. The men rushed into the house and dragged Mr. Smith and Capt. McLean (who were in bed with their wives) into a front spare bedroom. Mr. Caldwell, the brother of Mrs. McLean, was thrust in beside them and all three were shot in cold blood. Capt. McLean and Mr. Smith were dead before an ambulance could arrive. Mr. Thomas Henry Smith, civilian about 45 years of age, leaves a wife and three children. Capt. McLean,

"Once we are members of the league, we shall demand that our fate be dealt with seriously. We are really sick of being continuously treated like a patient who first is treated ill by his physician's wrong treatment and to whom the doctor will not tell either the day or the operation to be performed upon him or what kind of an operation is necessary for his recovery."

"At our last governmental election we drove the Communists to the devil. Under very trying conditions we have maintained perfect peace and order in Austria. We want to start a new and sound economic life. The fate of the whole of Central Europe depends on our fate, in the same way the fate of all Europe depends on the fate of Central Europe."

Joseph Pulitzer Jr. Chosen for School of Journalism Board

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The trustees of Columbia University have appointed Joseph Pulitzer Jr., of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a member of the advisory board of the Pulitzer School of Journalism for a term of four years. The school was founded by his father, Joseph Pulitzer, owner of the Post-Dispatch and the New York World. The advisory board nominated him for the position.

A statement issued at the University yesterday called attention to the growth of the school and changes made within the year. Although the school is comparatively new, it has passed the experimental stage and is firmly established now, says the statement.

Upper Silesian Plebiscite Vote to Be Taken in Several Days

British and French Premiers Agree on Plan to Block Packing of Province With Germans.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Premiers Lloyd George of Great Britain, and Leygues of France, conferring until late this evening, definitely settled the vexatious question of the Upper Silesian Plebiscite in a manner the heads of the two Governments believe will forestall what they think is Germany's effort to pack the province with Germans for voting purposes.

Under the plan of the Premiers, the vote will be taken in several days, the status of a citizen to govern when he shall vote. It will be arranged that known citizens of the province, whom the Plebiscite officials are confident have lived there a number of years, will vote on one day. Others who have lived in the province a shorter time will vote another day, while those who recently settled will vote on still another day. Should the latter category swing the plebiscite in favor of Germany and the bona fide citizens vote against Germany, the allies are likely to declare the plebiscite void.

The near Eastern question was postponed until the arrival of Count Storace, the Italian Foreign Minister, on Sunday. The Premiers decided not to invite former Premier Venizelos of Greece, as they could discuss the situation with him only as a private citizen.

up by the Assembly by the end of next week. The "Little Entente" will propose admission of Austria, replacing Greece as non-permanent member of the council while the Scandinavian group favors Sweden. Switzerland is strongly advocating admission of Austria, with the proviso, however, that, if reaction occurs in Austria, with a restoration of the monarchy, she will insist upon the right of the province of Vorarlberg to decide whether to remain a part of Austria or not. Vorarlberg recently requested that it be attached to Switzerland, but this request was rejected by the latter country.

Committee No. 4, which has been examining the accounts of the League, finally has approved the comparatively high salaries paid the personnel of the secretariat, finding the high cost of living in Geneva justified them, in part, while the expense of each worker in reaching his native country should also be taken into account.

Committee on Amendments.

The organization committee has decided to approve the suggestion that the four elective members of the council shall be chosen so that only one term will expire each year. It has also decided to set up a committee to study all proposals and recommendations of the council, and to submit them to the council for its consideration.

The contracting tailors are members of the Journeymen Tailors' Union, although they have no voice in the adjustment of wage scales. Ben Pearlman, a contracting vest maker in the Victoria Building, after a conference yesterday afternoon with Ben Berg, president, and Abe Hyatt, secretary, of the union, said that the proposition to reduce the cost of operators would be submitted to the entire membership of the union tomorrow night, but that he was quite sure that the men would not consent to a reduction.

The workman gets a certain price for each garment that he makes, regardless of whether the suit is sold by the tailor for $35 or $100," said Pearlman. "The prices having reached their peak, the tailors find that business has slumped, and they want the workmen to suffer the loss. He cannot afford to do this, as the cost of living has not been materially reduced."

Ben says that the workers had reached their present wage scale through two years of hard effort and by gradual increases, and that they do not purpose to go back to old conditions until there is a noticeable reduction in living costs.

"We work 55 hours a week and we earn an average of $29 a week, where, before the war we worked 90 hours a week and received an average wage of $24 a week," said Berg. "It makes no difference what the tailor charges for a suit of clothes. We get the same rate of pay for each garment we make. We have two dull periods each year. We have practically nothing to do in June, July, August, December, January and February."

"There are 1250 members in our union, and not more than 200 of them work for the contractors that do business with the Master Tailors' Association. The latter organization represents a very small percentage of the tailoring business in St. Louis. The ready-to-wear establishments have reduced prices, and the merchant tailors find that there is no longer a big demand for their class of business. They do not want to meet the situation half way, but they want the workmen to bear their losses."

"We Have Assassinated Ireland for 600 Years," British Editor Says

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—G. GARDINER, eminent British editor, pleads for the rights of the "plain people of Great Britain" in a characteristically outspoken denunciation of British rule in Ireland, which he addresses this morning to the Daily News.

He says there was mourning in Dublin and in London yesterday in a clan of nine servants of the crown, brutally murdered in circumstances of incredible horror by the Sinn Fein, and in Dublin for 16 men and women as ruthlessly murdered by servants of the crown.

"The story of English rule in Ireland," he continues, "is the darkest tragedy on earth with the single exception of the tragedy in Armenia. We have assassinated the Irish nation for 600 years; we have burned its towns and put its people to the sword. We have destroyed its manufactures. Again and again we have placed in Ireland garrisons to overawe the nation. We have driven the people from the soil, so that today the population is only half what it was a century ago."

"There is no tale of corruption so sustained, so malignant, in the annals of civilized Europe. We have made a peace of violence in Ireland often before, and there is no reason why we should not do it again, if we ruthlessly murdered by sufficient ruthlessness."

"Let us assume that the policy succeeds; that a peace of terror is imposed; that there is a great drive of the youth of Ireland across the seas. Where do they go? To America, to Australia, to South Africa, with a sleepless purpose of vengeance in their hearts. We don't kill disease by driving it over the seas; we only spread it. If you drive out 30,000, another generation will rise to avenge them, to be driven out, perhaps, by a new terror; and so on with endless iteration."

"For 600 years we have tried to conquer and crush Ireland. We have failed and we shall always fail. But we can win Ireland tomorrow on the same terms on which we have won and kept free nations overseas. The glories of our rule are the victories of liberty, as in Canada and South Africa. Its shame is the failures of tyranny, as in the United States and Ireland."

who served with the Rifle Brigade during the war along with his brother-in-law, Mr. John Caldwell, a native of Prestwick, Scotland, had come to Ireland with the view of securing employment in the police and kept Mrs. Smith and Mrs. McLean were in the house when their husbands were murdered. It is said that the assassins dragged their victims to an empty room to murder them. Captain McLean was overpowered, implored them not to murder him under his wife's eyes. On completing their dastardly work the murderers ran out of the house and disappeared.

"Case D, 92 Lower Baggot street. One murder. A party of raiders, numbering a dozen, were let in by the landlady, Mrs. Slack, and asked for Capt. Newbury, court-martial officer, who lived there with his wife. Seeing the crowd, the landlady rushed upstairs in terror and saw nothing of the subsequent happenings. The murderers knocked at Newbury's door. Mrs. Newbury opened it, and seeing the crowd of men with revolvers, slammed the door in their faces and locked it. The men burst the door, but the police escaped and the room was empty. Capt. Newbury and his wife together tried to hold the door against them and almost succeeded in shutting it when the men fired through the door, wounding Newbury, who though blood was running down his face, managed to get to the window, flung it open and was half out when the murderers ran into the house. Mrs. Newbury flung herself between the door and the window, and fired seven shots into Newbury's body. The police found the body half in and half out the window, covered with a blanket which had been thrown over it. The body was placed over the window, and the police officers especially noted that the murderers in this case, as in two other cases, made diligent search for papers, hoping, perhaps, to find the abstract documents or evidence on which military law officers were working."

Familiar With House.

"Case E, 28 Upper Pembroke street. Two officers murdered and four wounded. The residence of Mrs. Gray was raided at 9 in the morning by about 20 men, some of whom came on bicycles. The house consists of several floors, and the raiders, undisturbed, held up a maid on the stairs and Mrs. Gray, the proprietress, who was leaving her room. The house appeared to be familiar to the raiders who were in the house, and went to various parts of the house. Ten to 12 shots were heard and following these the assassins decamped. Mrs. Gray and her maid visited the rooms immediately and found Major (Grenadier Guards) and his wife shot dead at his bedroom door. Capt. Price of the Royal Engineers was found dead in his room. Next door was Capt. Kenilside (Lancashire Fusiliers), whose wife most gallantly struggled with the murderers and thereby frustrated their purpose. He was wounded in the arm. Col. Woodcock was fired at as he came down stairs. He appeared to have taken the raiders who were in the hall, unaware. He called out to Col. Montgomery, who coming out of his room, was wounded in the body. Turning toward his room to secure a weapon, Col. Woodcock was also wounded. Col. Woodcock was a widower, 60 years of age, leaves a wife and three children. Capt. McLean, who served with the Rifle Brigade during the war along with his brother-in-law, Mr. John Caldwell, a native of Prestwick, Scotland, had come to Ireland with the view of securing employment in the police and kept Mrs. Smith and Mrs. McLean were in the house when their husbands were murdered. It is said that the assassins dragged their victims to an empty room to murder them. Captain McLean was overpowered, implored them not to murder him under his wife's eyes. On completing their dastardly work the murderers ran out of the house and disappeared.

"Case F, 38 Upper Mount street. Two murders. House entered 9:40 a. m. Twenty armed and unmasked men entered the house. Captain Farrell, who unwillingly pointed out rooms occupied by Lieut. Ames of Grenadier Guards and Lieut. Bennett of R. A. S. C. motor transport, was overpowered and shot. Another male lodger that murder was being done downstairs. A fusillade of shots was heard; when they came downstairs they found two bodies in Ames' bedroom. Bennett was evidently dragged from his own bedroom into his brother officer's room, where both were shot together, their bodies lying side by side."

"Case G, Fresham Hotel, Sackville street. Twenty armed men entered open door of hotel. They held up the boots and the head porter. With revolvers they forced the latter, Hugh Callaghan, to empty room to murder them. Captain McLean was overpowered, implored them not to murder him under his wife's eyes. On completing their dastardly work the murderers ran out of the house and disappeared."

"Case H, 119 Lower Baggott street. One murder. Raid presumably as in other cases. Capt. Baggott, court-martial officer, shot dead. When police arrived, every occupant of the house had left and no witnesses were available to describe the circumstances. Baggott was shot a leg in the war and was a barrister at law."

Shooting at Croke Park.

"The occurrences at Croke Park in the afternoon were as follows: "The civil authority had reason to believe that the Sinn Fein gunmen responsible for the cold-blooded and carefully planned atrocities described above were in the crowd at the football match. As was their duty, they sent a force of police, supported by soldiers, to the place to arrest the murderers. As they surrounded the park the police were fired on by Sinn Fein pickets. The force was returned in self-defense and 10 men were killed. The firing was not indiscriminate, and no women were hit. Some arrests were made. It was the intention to warn the crowd at the football park through a megaphone of the intended search. The resistance encountered at the outset made this impossible, and the firing produced a panic and stampede, in which men and women were trampled on and injured one another. It appears probable that the desperadoes who opened fire on the police deliberately counted on producing a panic in the hope that in the confusion the murderers would escape."

"It is wholly contrary to the facts to suggest that this deplorable occurrence partook in any way of the nature of a reprisal."

UNION TAILORS TO VOTE ON PROPOSAL TO REDUCE SCALE

Masters' Association Says Public Would Benefit Immediately by Saving $10 or $15 on a Suit.

WORKERS' OFFICIALS PREDICT A REFUSAL

President Berg Says Members
Will Fight Out in $39 Scale Until Living Costs
Fall.

Following a request from the Master Tailors' Association, embracing in its membership 125 merchant tailors, that contract tailors reduce the cost of coats from $5.50 to $6.75, the cost of trousers from $3.20 to $2.20, and the cost of vests from $2.50 to $1.50, contracting tailors and officials of the Journeymen Tailors' Union met yesterday afternoon and agreed to submit the proposition to the two local branches of the union tomorrow night.

Samuel L. Fox of 615 Pine street, president of the Master Tailors' Association, said that if the workmen would consent to the proposed reduction in their wages the public would benefit immediately by a reduction in the price of clothes of from $10 to $15 a suit. He said that the garment contractors had been asked to reduce their prices.

"This is not a fight on the unions," said Fox. "It merely is part of the nation-wide movement on the part of merchants to adapt themselves to the general readjustment scheme. The manufacturer has cut the price of materials and trimmings, the tailors are ready to reduce their net profit $5 to $10 a suit and we believe it is only fair that the workers should share in the distribution of the reduction."

To Submit Matter to Union.

Organization Urges That Dealers Abandon Tendency of Last 90 Days to Postpone Laying in Stocks.

PROPOSAL IS CALLED THE ST. LOUIS PLAN

Purpose Is to Give Industry Enough Orders to Keep Factories in Normal Operation Through Winter.

A recommendation that retailers manufacturers and jobbers abandon their tendency of the last 90 days to postpone buying for spring and begin immediately to enter future orders was issued yesterday by the Associated Retailers, an organization of 65 of the larger downtown retail stores, from the office of its president, Melville L. Wilkinson.

The purpose is to give industry enough orders to maintain normal operation through the winter. The statement is the result of a conference among representatives of St. Louis manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers held Wednesday and labeled "The St. Louis Plan." The text follows:

The St. Louis Plan. The buying policy which, after a conference of the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of St. Louis, has been adopted by the leading retailers of the city, and which by them is recommended to the buyers of the country as the safest course to follow under existing conditions:

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 26, 1920. In our judgment present developments warrant a reversal of the buying policy which we have followed for the past 90 days.

Raw Materials: Basic raw materials in practically all industries have declined to a point where further recessions seem unlikely.

Manufacturing: Manufacturers in order to maintain their regular production and give employment to their labor during this transition period, are offering to operate on a closer margin than would be possible as a permanent policy. This situation is unique and only temporary. In our judgment it offers the opportunity to secure merchandise on a more favorable basis than will be possible in January, when a general resumption of buying is anticipated.

"Including $80.82 collected at the Coliseum and $1.76 from collected coins. Buildings for which no figures are shown in the 1919 columns had no collection last year."

Employees' Lists Not Reported. A. L. Shapleigh, president of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, said the increase in the number of givers, and in the receipts, was gratifying. The fine weather helped, he said, and so did the spirit shown by the women. He said employees' lists, so far as they have been reported, show a substantial increase over last year. Last year the employees' lists reached a total of $11,491.21, and the trades and professions gave $14,360.50. These givers receive tags, like those who give in public places.

"At the American Annex Hotel," Shapleigh related, "a not very prosperous looking man made a donation of 50 cents. He returned about an hour later and said, 'I want to give 25 cents more—I just got a better job.' From others who did not have ready money, we received Liberty bond coupons, United Railways tokens, several Canadian coins and a Cuban centavo."

The receipts were counted by counting machines at the National Bank of Commerce last night. The largest year's receipts of the association hitherto were $55,266.77 in 1918. The second largest was last year's amount, $54,220.68. These figures include the receipts from membership dues of $2 each, there being about 1600 members.

The 27 years of collection to date have furnished an income of $556,133.22 to the association, of which $808,226.60 has been distributed to 20 or more hospitals, and $45,149.47 has paid the expenses of the collections. Last year's receipts were distributed among 16 hospitals.

SIDELIGHTS ON TAX COLLECTIONS FOR HOSPITALS "Looks like first division," women in charge of stands of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association quoted from a well-known sport writer yesterday. "We ordered 150,000 tags this year, which we estimated would be more than enough," said Miller Hageman, in charge of the tagging campaign. "Thursday night they were all gone and 30,000 additional were asked for by industrial plants. We ordered 50,000, and virtually all of them have been used. That makes a total of far more than have been needed in any previous year. Indications are that 100,000 employees have subscribed at factories, and the contributions will aggregate considerably more than last year."

CHIEF SEEKS HELP FROM CITIZENS IN CLEAN-UP OF CITY

WARNING IS ISSUED TO RESORT KEEPERS

Declaration Made That Capt. Stinger's New Bureau Will Strive to Rid St. Louis of Crooks and Loafers.

An appeal to citizens for full co-operation between the public and the Police Department was issued yesterday by Chief of Police O'Brien, who in a formal statement outlined the department's plan of campaign against crime and commercialized vice.

Resort keepers and harborers of the "shady class" are warned by the Police Chief that no "kid-glove methods" are to be used by the department in dealing with the situation. "The fight is on to rid St. Louis of crooks and loafers and will be waged relentlessly until it is won," the Chief stated.

Chief O'Brien, in his appeal, asks for information and complaints from citizens, which he says will be investigated by the new "clean-up division" of the department, headed by Capt. William Stinger, with a view to getting rid of the situations complained of. Such information may be anonymous or otherwise and will be treated confidentially if so desired.

Took Matter Up With Board. In explaining his statement, Chief O'Brien said to a Post-Dispatch reporter:

"Capt. Stinger is about ready to begin active operations. I am making this appeal for closer co-operation between the police and the public because I believe much good can be accomplished this way. I took the matter up with the Police Commissioners Friday and the Statement has their full sanction. The board also officially named the new bureau as the 'clean-up division' of the department."

"I am determined to clean up St. Louis and keep it clean. Beggars, loafers, idlers, bums and crooks must be cleaned up."

"So must the shady places they frequent and which harbor them. Pool rooms, soft drink parlors, dance halls and all other places where crookedness is fostered will be required to conduct their business on strictly legitimate lines or close. The cleanup is going to be complete and permanent."

"The citizens of St. Louis can render the department valuable assistance in this cleanup work. We are counting on their support and co-operation. They often have information of some crooked or shady place brought to their attention by the escape of a person or the child of a neighbor. They hesitate to complain because they have no evidence."

"Here is where they can be of assistance to the Police Department. They can tell of their suspicions and telling of the location of the place. These letters will be forwarded to Capt. Stinger and his men will investigate properly and thoroughly each case and take proper action."

"In future it will be the policy of the department to solicit from citizens legitimate complaints of illegal acts and places and suspicious characters. It is preferable that they sign their names and addresses to indicate good faith and whenever they request it I will personally guarantee their identity will not be revealed. However, I want it known that all complaints, even though they come to us anonymously, will be investigated. We want the information and will supply the action."

Complaints Are Solicited. "It makes no difference what the nature of the kick is, whether it pertains to bootlegging, making or selling of liquor, gambling, immoral resorts, gang infested neighborhoods, low down poolrooms or dance halls, hang-outs for loafers or criminals, illegitimate conducted hotels, houses and drink parlors—we want the complaints and Stinger and his men will investigate each and every one and apply the remedy."

Historic First Regiment of Missouri Reorganized

Old St. Louis Volunteer Infantry Body Will Be Made Up of One Local Battalion and Two From Southeast Part of State.

The First Regiment, National Guard of Missouri, St. Louis' historic volunteer infantry body, was reorganized yesterday to include one battalion of St. Louis troops and two battalions from Southeast Missouri. At a meeting of the commissioned officers in the Armory last night, Warren Massey of Cape Girardeau was elected Colonel of the First Regiment; Maj. Charles S. Thornton of St. Louis, was elected Lieutenant-Colonel; Capt. Charles B. Allen was elected Major of the Second (St. Louis) Battalion, and Geo. Hitchcock of Caruthersville and Lisle Malone of Sikeston were elected Majors of the First and Third battalions, respectively. All the elections were unanimous.

Col. Horace S. Rumsey, who has been in command of the First Regiment, has been assigned to the task of reorganizing the First Missouri Field Artillery, two new batteries of which are to be organized in St. Louis. His connection with the infantry regiment ceases.

To Keep First intact. The reorganization was carried out in conformity with a plan worked out by Adjutant-General Harvey C. Clark and the officers of the First Regiment, as it has existed in fragmentary form for more than a year past. The purpose is to keep the First Regiment intact as an organization until a sufficient number of volunteers can be obtained in St. Louis to form a full-strength infantry regiment. By that time, it is expected, more companies will also have been organized in Southern and Southeast Missouri, and the companies outside St. Louis can be formed into an independent regiment, leaving the First again as an all-St. Louis regiment.

Gen. Clark, in an announcement of the plans for the regiment, and for the National Guard of the State, said that, besides a complete infantry brigade and three artillery regiments, it is intended to organize aviation, tank and anti-aircraft units. The Second (Southwest) Missouri Regiment, which was converted, before going overseas, into machine gun battalions, is being reorganized as an anti-aircraft regiment.

The St. Louis battalion of the reorganized First Regiment consists of four companies and a band, 310 men and officers. The other two battalions, which comprise eight companies, besides a supply company and a headquarters company, are in Southeast Missouri, in the towns from which the Sixth Missouri Regiment went to Camp Doniphan in 1917. The Sixth was consolidated with the Tenth from Kansas City, to form the 140th Infantry of the Thirty-fifth Division.

classes I want to make it clear that the Police Department is going to use no kid-glove methods in this cleanup work. The situation demands hard methods and that is what the lawbreakers are going to get.

"The department has undertaken a good job and will go about it energetically, zealously and methodically. The good citizens can help us wonderfully with complaints and information. We expect their assistance and invite their complaints. In return we pledge the resources of the department in making the proper investigations and taking the proper action. The result will be a better and cleaner city. The fight to rid St. Louis of crooks and evil places is on, and will be waged relentlessly until it is won."

Citizens Can Aid Move. "The citizens of St. Louis can render the department valuable assistance in this cleanup work. We are counting on their support and co-operation. They often have information of some crooked or shady place brought to their attention by the escape of a person or the child of a neighbor. They hesitate to complain because they have no evidence."

YOUNG WOMAN LOSES FUR COAT IN HOLDUP

Four Men Step From Coupe and Rob Couple in Front of 5648 Cabanne Avenue.

Four young men in a coupe drove alongside Donald McIntosh and Miss Alice Wolff, both of 1023A Goodfellow avenue, as they were walking east in front of 5648 Cabanne avenue, at 11 o'clock last night, three of them got out, presented automatic pistols and held up the couple.

McIntosh had only $6 in his pockets, which the robbers took, but from Miss Wolff they took a fur coat, valued at $210, and two rings, valued at $20. Then they drove east and disappeared.

Twenty minutes earlier two men had stepped out of an alley and held up James Castin, a foreman, of 5223 Romaine place, as he walked south on Hamilton avenue, between Wells and Ridge avenues, in the same neighborhood, and robbed him of his watch and chain, valued at $140, a scarfpin valued at $12 and of $58.50.

Paul Schnalzer, 29 years old, of 805 Salisbury street, a sheet metal worker, was passing an alley on Locust street, between Broadway and Sixth street, at 10:45 o'clock last night when he was knocked senseless with a blow on the head. When he recovered consciousness a few minutes later he was sitting in the alley with his back against a wall. His pockets were turned inside out, and $100 in $20 bills were missing. He told the police that he did not see his assailant. He was taken to the City Hospital where physicians said that he was suffering from a scalp wound and probably a fracture of the skull. The money represented his wages.

Harvey of Cleveland, O., who said he was stopping at Hotel Statler, was held up in Forest Park by two men at 9:45 o'clock last night when he was seated on a bench with a young woman near the St. Louis Hospital group of buildings. He declined to give the police the name of his companion.

Robbers Step From Coupe. He said that two men stepped from a coupe and asked him what he was doing. When he replied that he was merely sitting there, he said, one of the robbers drew a revolver and ordered him to stand up. The other robber searched him and took $9 and a bunch of keys from his pockets.

George Fisher of 3410 Morgan street, manager of a Kroger grocery at 3160 Park avenue, was held up by four men at 8:45 o'clock at Theresa avenue and Morgan street, when he was on his way home with the day's receipts, amounting to $80. He was knocked down by a blow on the head and the money was taken from his pocket. The robbers escaped in an automobile.

Four Other Holdups. Four other men were held up within a period of 45 minutes last night and robbed of a total of $191.76.

At 7 p. m. Oliver E. Jost, 4220A Clayton avenue, was robbed of $25 by a negro at Twenty-first and Chestnut streets.

Fifteen minutes later two men held up the grocery of John Runkling, 4755 Newberry terrace, and took $15 from him.

At 7:30 p. m. Lorene C. Luckett, 2625 South Jefferson avenue, was robbed of $9.70 by two men on Geary avenue, between Ohio and California avenues.

C. C. Remme, 3148A South Grand avenue, was held up by two men at 7:45 p. m. on Arkansas avenue between Junata and Connecticut streets, and robbed of $52.

FIRST COMMUNITY CENTER IN SCHOOL TO OPEN TUESDAY

SESSIONS THREE NIGHTS A WEEK

Various Athletic Clubs to Meet at Regular Hours—Dancing Thursday Nights for Married Couples.

The first community center established by the public school and park authorities will be set in operation Tuesday night at the Ashland School, Newstead and San Francisco avenues. The preliminary work of organizing the participants into various clubs was accomplished last week. The plan, devised by Principal William Walters, Rodoway Abeken, director of recreation in the Park Department, and T. E. Spencer, head of extension work in the schools, has been approved by the school and park authorities.

As now arranged, the schedule calls for activities at the school on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, consisting of dancing, music, basketball, handball and other indoor athletics, all of which are open to adults and children alike. As membership in the clubs will be limited, for a time, there has been a rush of applicants for enrollment. The senior basketball club is composed of four teams, made up of men and boys over 18 years old, and it will have the floor from 8:45 to 10 o'clock on Tuesday and Friday evenings. The junior club, composed of four teams of boys under 18, will have the floor from 7:30 to 8:40 on the same evenings. There is a large playground where volley ball, corner ball and other sports may be played while the basketball games are in progress.

Dancing Club on Thursdays. The present school orchestra of 14 pieces is being expanded to 30 pieces, and will practice on Tuesday evenings. A drum and bugle corps, of boys about 12 years old, is being formed, and the Patrons Association has volunteered to employ a director. The dancing club will meet every Thursday evening from 7:30 to 10 o'clock. For the present, membership will be limited to 60 persons of each sex, the members to be 18 years of age or over. Prof. Walters, who is the supervisor of the center, emphasized that married people are welcome in this club.

A three-piece orchestra has been engaged for the dancing, and the kindergarten room and the first-floor hallway will supply the floor space. No person who is a stranger to Prof. Walters can join the dancing club unless recommended by someone who is known to him. The dances will be chaperoned by directors from the Park Department.

To meet incidental expenses a membership fee of 50 cents a month is charged by the dancing club, in addition to which men and boys pay 15 cents, and girls and women 10 cents each, at the door.

Membership dues in the basketball clubs are 25 cents a month for men and boys, and 15 cents a month for women and girls.

Girls' Basketball Clubs. The girls' basketball clubs also will meet on Tuesday and Friday evenings. Their courts are separate from those used by the men and boys, and the hours are the same. Girls under 16 years play from 7:30 to 8:40, and women and girls over 16 play from 8:45 to 10. The junior and senior clubs will each contain four teams. Volley ball and basketball clubs for girls and women also are to be formed.

A handball club for men and boys already has enrolled members. There will be two divisions of 12 players each, and they will have the floor Tuesday and Friday evenings. Membership dues will be 25 cents a month.

Lessons in social dancing will be given for women and girls of more than 14 years, beginning immediately after the Christmas holidays. These will be on Friday evenings. Girls 14 and 15 years will be taught from 7:30 to 8:30, and older ones will be taught from 8:30 to 10. The instructors will be women playground directors furnished by the Park Department.

Other Centers Planned. Plans for the entertainment of older people who are not interested in dancing or athletic games, have not progressed so far. Prof. Walters said yesterday, however, that he was ready to receive applications for membership in a progressive 500 club, a history club, sewing club, literary and dramatic club, and checker and chess clubs. The number of members in all these will be limited.

Under the supervision of the directors, all clubs are to be self-governing. Officers will be elected and the members will outline their own program within the limits set by the directors. There will be strict supervision of all activities. The Park Department supplies four women and two men directors for this work. If the community center experiment proves successful at Ashland, it is intended to start similar centers at other schools.

Army Aviator and Pulitzer Silver Trophy He Won for Year by Fast Flight on Thanksgiving Day

'BUG' DEVELOPS IN ARMY AIR RACER ABOVE 180 MILES

Three Attempts by Pulitzer Trophy Winner to Establish Speed Record Fail When Engine Misses.

By Leased Wire from the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch. NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Capt. C. C. Mosely, winner of the Pulitzer Trophy in Thursday's air race at Mitchell Field, Mineola, trying today for a world's speed record with the Verville army racer, ran his machine slap against the door of the unknown. He discovered and, in a series of efforts, demonstrated that when a machine passes a speed of 180 miles an hour it enters a field of brand new problems which the experts will have to solve before they can claim to have produced the 200-mile an hour plane.

This, in a general way, is why Capt. Mosely did not set a new speed record. It is impossible to give the specific reason, because neither the pilot nor A. C. Verville, the designer of the plane, nor Col. J. G. Vincent, who fathered the 600-horsepower Packard engine, has discovered it. They are face to face with a mystery of physics and which calls for work in the laboratory and the wind tunnel.

The best guess offered after the trials was that at the high speeds attempted a vacuum is formed behind the carburetor intake which interferes with the mixture of gasoline and air necessary for the motor. Col. Vincent put this forth as merely a theory, but frankly confessed himself stumped.

Chokes, Gasps and Misses. The motor worked all right on the ground; it functioned perfectly at the take-off, and an instant later showed 190 miles on the air-speed indicator, but, opened wide for the actual test over the measured kilometer, it choked, gasped and missed, very clearly failing to deliver a considerable number of the 600 horses whose power is locked up in its mechanism.

As it was, Capt. Mosely stepped the plane over the course for one kilometer at the rate of 186 miles an hour, which was his best attainment of record during the day. His vexation at the failure of the machine to deliver up to its maximum was vivid.

Atmospheric conditions were favorable for the trials. There was the merest puff of wind from the west and, while the cloud ceiling hung low, the visibility was adequate. The pilot took the machine out in the afternoon for her first try-out and, after going over the course in 11.97 seconds and discovering that his engine was missing, checked in and turned the contraption over to the mechanics for adjustment.

About 2:30 p. m. Capt. Mosely took off again. The engine had been run at high speed with plane standing and showed every promise of doing what was expected of it. The start was perfect, the motor running like a clock.

Falls Below Forenoon Record.

Capt. Mosely headed into the west and, swinging around, pointed the nose down the course and opened her up. A broad black smoke ribbon trailed behind on the still air as, flying at about 200 feet, the plane thundered down the field. The electrical timing apparatus clocked off 12.17 seconds for the kilometer, or a speed of 183.9 miles per hour. This was 2.1 miles slower than the best morning record.

It was clearly noticeable that the engine was "missing" as the plane passed over the heads of observers, but it was hoped it would pick up on a second trial. The second, however, was less satisfactory than the first. 12.47 for the kilometer, or 179 miles per hour. Capt. Mosely, realizing that nothing could be done with a motor that was choking to death, brought the machine to the ground and declared his regret at his failure to establish a new world's record.

The Verville army racer will be shipped to McCook Field, Dayton, and there search will be instigated for the "bug" which balks its ambition. Out of the investigation is expected new and important light on high-speed phenomena.

BATTLE FILM EXHIBIT FOR UNITED RAILWAYS EMPLOYEES

Views of Marines in Belleau Wood Among Pictures to Be Shown.

American Legion members among United Railways employees have obtained from the Marine Corps and the War Department 10 reels of battle films never before shown in St. Louis, and have invited their fellow ex-service men and families to see them, gratis, at United Railways Hall, Grand and Vista avenues, Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. All former soldiers and sailors, whether members of the legion or not, will be welcome, and their friends.

Six of the reels were made by Marine signal men in the fighting at Belleau Wood, showing the Marines in some of the heaviest battling. Before these pictures are screened they will be carefully edited by Col. Albert T. Perkins and a committee to eliminate some of the too vivid scenes of the wounded and suffering. The four other reels, obtained from the War Department, are selected and censored flashes of brilliant action from all the American sectors in the war.

The purpose is to arouse the interest of United Railways men in the legion, and to stimulate attendance at the "Battle of Paris," to be given at the Coliseum, Dec. 7 to 12.

HAMON'S BODY LIES IN STATE AT ARDMORE; FUNERAL TOMORROW

Woman Charged With Shooting Oklahoma G. O. P. Leader Has Not Been Found.

By the Associated Press. ARDMORE, Ok., Nov. 27.—Scores of telegrams and letters of condolence and sympathy and floral arrays arrived here today for Mrs. Jake L. Hamon, widow of Jake L. Hamon, Republican National Committeeman from Oklahoma, who died here early yesterday from a bullet wound inflicted in a hotel room here last Sunday night.

It was announced at the County Attorney's office that no progress had been made in the search for Clara Smith, charged, with assault with intent to kill in connection with the wounding of Hamon.

Hamon's death was the result of a "gunshot" wound, according to a statement signed by five physicians. His business manager has stated the wound was caused by the "accidental discharge" of a pistol, which Hamon was cleaning in his room in a local hotel last Sunday night.

The body will lie in state in Convention Hall here from 8 a. m. until 2 p. m. Monday. Funeral services will be held at the Presbyterian Church and burial will be in a local cemetery.

ARGUMENTS HEARD IN MARY PICKFORD CASE

Judge Who Granted Divorce Refuses to Disqualify Himself in Action to Set Aside Decree.

By the Associated Press.

RENO, Nev., Nov. 27.—Arguments began in the District Court here today to quash the suit the State filed to set aside the divorce granted to Mary Pickford from Owen Moore. Miss Pickford, since her divorce was granted here March 2, has been married to Douglas Fairbanks, and in the State's petition was referred to as "Gladys Moore, known as Gladys M. Fairbanks."

Attorney Gavin McNab's arguments for the petitioner occupied practically the entire morning session of the court.

The motion was argued before Judge Frank Langan, who granted the original decree. Judge Langan refused to accede to a request made by Attorney-General Fowler that he withdraw from the case.

The proceedings today did not go to the merits of the controversy as raised by the State, namely, that Mary Pickford's divorce decree was obtained as a result of fraud and through collusion between herself and Owen Moore. The matter came up today on a motion to quash the service of summons on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction because the parties in interest all were served outside the State.

Attorneys on both sides admitted that no matter what Judge Langan's ruling shall be the case will be carried to the State Supreme Court on the points involved in today's hearing.

The court permitted each side 10 days in which to file briefs. McNab contended that the statutes of Nevada do not provide for a review of divorce cases by the Attorney-General, and that the State official has no legal power to interfere in the orderly process of courts and disturb their judgments.

Man Who Won't Accept Inheritance of $1,000,000 Says He Didn't Earn It

Charles Garland, Disciple of Tolstoy, Explains Stand—His Wife Also Will Refuse Any Money Left to Her.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Nov. 27.—Mrs. Charles Garland agrees with her husband in his determination to refuse his inheritance of a million dollars. She said so, smiling cheerfully, and added: "I am quite willing to be a poor man's wife, and if my family in Dedham leave me any money—they have plenty of it—I will turn it down myself."

Nor do the couple have any fear that they are doing an injustice to their baby Margaret, just a month and a half old. "She will be far better off without all that wealth," Charles asserted in dismissing that subject.

The couple entertained a great many strangers this week following the announcement that Charles would not accept the fortune bequeathed him by his father. The elder brother, James A. Garland Jr., who accepted his inheritance, shut himself up in his house on the estate and would talk to or see no one. The younger couple answered questions frankly, but coldly. They were perfectly at ease, perfectly sincere. They were not glad to see their questioners and did not pretend to be.

Wears His Old Clothes. Charles greeted the visitors attired in a flannel shirt, with sleeves rolled up, and a rumpled pair of trousers. He was unshaven and neckless. His sneakers were well worn out. Mrs. Garland was as simply dressed in a plain blue smock, a skirt and battered yellow shoes.

"I don't like all this publicity," said Charles Garland. "I didn't think that my refusal would bring all you people down here to question me."

Then he remarked that if he could set an example to others it was probably well worth while. Question after question was fired at him. The story thus obtained, with the interrogation omitted, runs like this: "I haven't the slightest interest in what becomes of the money. If the trustees who have it devote it to their own uses I shan't protest. I would no more accept the inheritance of my father than you would accept stolen cattle. It is against the teachings of Christ and against my moral beliefs. The money is not mine; I did nothing to earn it."

The young man's voice shook. "I haven't any money in the bank," he said. "I expect to continue this winter living where I am now. This is my mother's house. Food and other expenses are, as you force me to say, paid by my mother. I can't see anything wrong in that."

Nor did either man or wife see anything incongruous in the presence of a maid in the house. Mrs. Garland needed assistance and mother Garland hired the help. "Vagueness characterized much of Charles' discussion. He declared he had no reforms to suggest to the outside world. He asserted again that he believed money was at the bottom of the world's troubles, and let it go at that. No man should, if he followed the teachings of Christ, be able to live over bounteously so long as the earth teems with misery, he suggested. He is evidently a believer in charity, but he could not see his way even to using his inheritance for benevolent purposes."

Ignorant of Fortune's Origin. And yet despite this reluctance to take the Garland money, he makes an astonishing assertion. "I don't even know how grandfather made his money," he says. "I suppose I did know, but I have forgotten."

Vagueness continues in his ideal of

He described a tour of Europe when he was 13 and his studies at Eton. He rebuked the suggestion that he was "educated" at Eton, remarking that he "amended there," the distinction in his mind apparently being to condemn modern educational systems.

But despite his disgust with schools he came back from Eton to St. Paul's at Concord, N. H., and from there he went to Harvard.

Was Athlete in College.

Charles sketched hurriedly his freshman year. He admitted taking part in college athletics. He even rowed on the freshman crew. But in the summer of 1917 Miss May Wren came along. They were married, and instead of returning to college, Charles came down to this Buzzards Bay country to live on a farm.

The farm was run out. The farmer was new at his trade. Charles agreed to the facts in the shape of questions. He also agreed that he had not made any money. He was even behind financially at the end of this last summer.

"I haven't any money in the bank," he said. "I expect to continue this winter living where I am now. This is my mother's house. Food and other expenses are, as you force me to say, paid by my mother. I can't see anything wrong in that."

Nor did either man or wife see anything incongruous in the presence of a maid in the house. Mrs. Garland needed assistance and mother Garland hired the help. "Vagueness characterized much of Charles' discussion. He declared he had no reforms to suggest to the outside world. He asserted again that he believed money was at the bottom of the world's troubles, and let it go at that. No man should, if he followed the teachings of Christ, be able to live over bounteously so long as the earth teems with misery, he suggested. He is evidently a believer in charity, but he could not see his way even to using his inheritance for benevolent purposes."

Ignorant of Fortune's Origin. And yet despite this reluctance to take the Garland money, he makes an astonishing assertion. "I don't even know how grandfather made his money," he says. "I suppose I did know, but I have forgotten."

Vagueness continues in his ideal of the amount of money a man is entitled to from his toil. He does not believe all men should toil manually. He asserts that mental labor is equally worthy. He believes in forcing his ideals on no one, asserting that every man is justified in living his own beliefs. In his estimation, however, "few men lead worthy lives." The desire for wealth, he contends, makes their effort dishonorable.

Yet Charles Garland enthusiastically enjoys the better things of life. He likes books and travel. He admits money is necessary for this travel. He believes books should be owned by the public. He steadfastly refused to say how much money he thought an individual ought to have.

Although generally condemning private ownership, he asserted that a man might properly own his home. He volunteered this: "Of course, a farmer's son ought to inherit his father's horses. He is justified in accepting them as an aid to producing his own living." It is not ambition which is unjustified. It is selfish ambition. Private property is the main cause of all unhappiness. There is no reason why one man should have control of food and land more than some other man.

Is Not a Socialist.

"But I am not a Socialist," added Charles. "I cannot accept some of the main doctrines of the party. I believe with them in self-government. I agree with them that a tremendous upheaval is coming; that the great part of mankind desires a change. That change isn't far away. The wretchedness of the present state is sufficient to cause this upset any time."

Pacifism also finds support in this modern disciple. He condemns wars. He condemns violence. Asked if he would defend his home against an intruder in the night, he answered, "I wouldn't defend my wife and home to the extent of physical injury to the intruder—no, no. I would try to overcome the evil designs by reasoning and passive resistance such as Christ used. I know it would work."

But when the World War was at its height Charles admits he came near enrolling as a military aviator. He was young, and his chance apparently came so late that peace intervened. He did not explain the whys that kept him out of service, but he went on to say, "I was misled then by patriotism."

Not Settled as to Work.

"I have no plans laid out for my future," Charles went on. "I expect that by spring I will know what I had better do. I have tried farming. I might continue that. It is not improbable that I will make my permanent home on Cape Cod. I know of no profession at which I might earn a living. I could be a mechanic or a carpenter, perhaps." He disclaimed any desire to write. Something "simpler" was his aim, he said.

In the course of much pressing of questions Garland admitted that his stand had caused much family argument. His mother, he explained, had not tried to influence him one way or the other. His wife chipped in to repeat that the argument had not been with her. She approves his stand. She is the exact opposite of her husband. "Sunny" best describes her personality. He is dark of skin and hair, quiet and reserved serious in manner and speech.

"I am perfectly content to be a poor man's wife," she said. "I don't mind hard work. I loved it on the farm last summer. I like country life because it is simple and out-of-doors."

Live on Large Estate.

Bay End Farm, where the couple live, is a big estate managed as a scientific farm by Frederic Tudor, Garland's mother's brother. Charles Garland's own try at farming was further down the cape at East Sandwich. Tudor was a candidate for Congress several years ago. That was his only public appearance since then he has lived strictly the life of a country gentleman. Mrs. Marie Tudor Garland, Charles' mother, is in Europe. She was born in Brooklyn, of one of Boston's old families. Her marriage in St. Paul's to James A. Garland was a social event of the season.

The fortune, which was bequeathed to the three sons, comes to them from "Jimmie" Garland, a former noted Boston clubman and yachtsman. The wedding of the then Marie Tudor, one of the famous daughters of the socially prominent and wealthy Boston and Brookline Tudor family, and "Jimmie" Garland was one of the social events of that time.

Second Marriage of Parents.

Later the couple separated, were divorced and lived apart for a time. But one day telegrams flashed between Boston and Hyannis on Cape Cod, where the Garland steam yacht had put in. There was a reunion on board the yacht, a second marriage followed and another honeymoon was spent in sailing through the blue waters of the Caribbean.

"Jimmie" Garland died only a short time later, leaving his immense fortune in part to his children, but largely to his wife in case she should never marry again. Marie Tudor Garland purchased a group of three farms at what is known as "the Head of the Bay," in Bourne, on Cape Cod.

Mrs. Garland, in her first farming experiments on the Cape, sought expert advice from Francis Cushing Green, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduate. The business relationship between the pair blossomed into a romance and Boston and New York society at last received the announcement that Marie Garland had renounced her title to the Garland millions for the sake of her love for Green.

Mrs. Garland is at present traveling in Italy. For a number of years her contributions and personal efforts have maintained a social service and domestic welfare center in the village of Bourne in the interests of the children and the grown-ups of that portion of Cape Cod. Her farm is one of the noted educational projects of the Cape.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY CLAIMS IMPROVED SERVICE

Reply Is Sent to Board of Aldermen's Appeal to the Missouri Public Service Commission.

ATTENTION DRAWN TO LACK OF OPERATORS

Shortage of Workers Continued Until September, It Is Stated—Tells of Expenses.

An assertion that the Bell telephone service in St. Louis has shown a "tremendous improvement" since last May is contained in a statement sent to the Board of Aldermen yesterday by the company as a reply to the board's resolution of Oct. 29, in which an appeal to the Missouri Public Service Commission to require the company to give better service was made. The Aldermen's estimate of the service at that time was that it "had deteriorated until it is now absolutely unbearable."

The company states that the increase of 50 cents a month in the residence rate, effective last Sept. 1, has enabled the company to increase the wages of operators and to add 371 operators in the various stations. In turn, it declares the effect of this addition of operators to be as follows, as established by observations of 3550 calls between Nov. 1 and Nov. 12:

The percentage of calls not answered within 10 seconds has fallen from 23 in May to 5.2 in the period named.

The average time required to answer a call has decreased from 8 seconds in May to 3.2 seconds.

The percentage of double connections, wrong numbers and cut-offs has fallen from 4.9 in May to 1.7.

The percentage of disconnections and disconnect supervisions over 10 seconds has decreased from 8.4 in May to 4.6.

Further Improvement Predicted.

Commenting upon this record, the company declares: "The above data shows a tremendous improvement over the grade of service rendered in May and, in fact, represents a grade of service which, considered absolutely by itself, can be fairly ranked as 'good.' In certain central offices, where the turnover in the force has been greatest and where the percentage of inexperienced operators is consequently the greatest, we expect to accomplish a considerable further

Character of Telephone Service Shown in Report

FOLLOWING is the record of improvement of the service of the Bell Telephone Co. in St. Louis during the months following last May, as stated by the company in its response to an inquiry of the Board of Aldermen concerning what character of service now is being rendered under the increased rates granted by the Public Service Commission in September:

	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov. 1-12
No. of observations...	7453	5816	6035	6328	6675	7917	3550
Per cent line signals not answered in 10 sec.	23.0	27.8	22.5	16.6	19.6	9.1	5.2
Average answer to line signals (seconds)	8.2	9.9	8.0	6.6	7.6	4.9	3.2
Per cent calls affected by double connections, wrong numbers and cut-offs	4.9	5.0	5.2	5.2	5.3	5.2	3.7
Per cent disconnections and disconnect supervisions over 10 seconds	8.4	9.6	10.8	9.2	8.7	6.4	4.6

Improvement during the coming month."

It is pointed out that the shortage of operators did not begin to decrease until September and that it requires several weeks' schooling before an operator is stationed at a board and several months before she can be regarded as thoroughly efficient. In this connection, the company states:

"It should be remembered in considering service as a whole that a large percentage of our operating force is still relatively inexperienced and in individual cases calls will not be handled as satisfactorily as would be the case with a more seasoned force. As the new operators gain in experience, however, the number of these cases will diminish and a further gradual improvement in the service will take place. This improvement will necessarily be less marked from now on for the reason that only a limited amount of further improvement is possible."

"We now are entering a period of very heavy traffic due to the Christmas season and this increased traffic will have its effect on service. We confidently expect, however, that we will be able to maintain the present grade of service during the heavy traffic of the next month."

The company estimated, at the time of its application, that the new rates would yield it approximately $421,000 additional revenue yearly, it promised to spend that entire sum in increasing the wages of operators and increasing the number of operators. It now states that on Aug. 29 it increased the wages of operators at the rate of $158,000 a year and that the 350 operators added involve an expenditure of $316,000, so that it is expending for operators at the rate of $484,000 yearly, or more than the sum yielded by the increased rates.

The company declares that it now has all the operators it requires. It further states that patrons have commented upon the speed with which trouble calls now are answered. Most of the report to the Aldermen is quotation from reports rendered the Public Service Commission, the last of which is dated Nov. 15.

Total profits from the Women's Exposition, held at the Coliseum Nov. 15-20, were $41,069.70, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. David McWilliams, the chairman. Of this amount, $37,496.51 goes to the Board of Religious Organizations, which gave the exposition, and $3573.19 goes to social service organizations which had booths there. The money will be used for social service and civic purposes.

The profits obtained from the respective booths were as follows: Advertising, $258.09; Baptist, $3000.40; Southern Methodist, $2921.23; Christian, $1323.75; Congregational, $2977.14; Episcopal, $1404.05; Ethical Society, $421.41; Jewish, $1451.27; Methodist, $1161.64; Presbyterian, $5000 (of which $1000 was from the sale of ice cream); Unitarian, $1137.96; Quilt booth, $468.

Social service organizations kept half the profits from their booths and gave the other half to the Board of Religious Organizations. The total profits from each were: Catherine Springer Home, $681.58; Epworth School for Girls, $866.56; Evangelical Federation, $775.18; Girls' Industrial Home, $321.40; Grace Holy Cross Home, $419; Mission Free School, $532.72; Neighborhood Association, $1048.24; Visiting Nurses, $1769.14; Kingdom House, $822.56. The American Indian booth netted $105.85; the Japanese tea garden, $1500; commercial concessions, $6369.99 and from all other sources was received $4374.53. Mrs. McWilliams said that an audit might change these figures slightly.

POLICE BOARD BEST IN 32 YEARS, ESPY SAYS

Lengthy Resume of Body's Accomplishments by Secretary Published in Police Journal.

A resume of the accomplishments of the present Board of Police Commissioners, of which Charles W. Mansur, recently appointed a Colonel on Gov. Gardner's staff, is the head, is contained this week in the issue of the Police Journal, the official organ of the department, edited by James C. Espy, secretary of the board.

"The present administration of the affairs of the Police Department," the resume reads, "is destined to go down in the history of St. Louis as the most progressive in the past 32 years."

The article then deals with the problems that faced the commissioners during the period of the war and the after effects, and tells of constructive methods used in building up a police system that, it is pointed out, is mentioned as a model by Eastern critics who have made a study of departments all over the country. It reviews the work of the commissioners from early in 1917, when one of their first steps was to abolish the Bureau of Efficiency and appoint C. Orrick Bishop, as Judge Advocate, to assume the duties that had been performed by the bureau to the present day when, as a fitting climax to their work, they

Other acts of the board, the presentation of which occupies five pages of the Police Journal, include the re-establishment of detective districts, the transfer of policewomen from the direction of a matron to that of a Detective Sergeant, the creation of automobile patrol districts, eliminating four auto patrols, 12 chauffeurs and 12 signal officers, the latter being assigned to beat duty, the elimination of four substations, releasing 12 patrolmen from beat duty, and the organizing of the "flying squadron" of motor cycle policemen.

W. Frank Carter, president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, yesterday wired Gen. The telegram follows:

"The congratulations and good wishes of St. Louis are extended to you upon the occasion of your inauguration as chief executive of our great sister republic."

"May the kindly relations of these two republics increase under your administration, in the course of which we are sure the Mexican people will greatly benefit by your constructive attitude toward commerce, culture and industry."

"St. Louis has always felt particularly close to Mexico, not only geographically, but in social and commercial relations. We desire to extend every good wish for the welfare of the people and of yourself."

The Foreign Trade Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, of which Jas. A. Troy is secretary, two years ago entertained Gen. Obregon on a visit to St. Louis. The bureau is preparing a special digest of trade information especially applicable to Mexican-American business interests and expects in the future a much larger volume of commerce between the two countries.

Strange Things Happen in Politics as Well as in Business.

At the last election a woman was elected to Congress from Oklahoma.

In Wisconsin a woman was made sheriff, which indicates that those of the fair sex with character and the power of achievement in our great country, can and do aspire to high honors.

In our large retail stores and factories the women hold some of the most important positions.

When selecting good furniture for a home, to harmonize with the surroundings, women seem better informed and display better taste.

I find that most of the furniture sold at this store is selected by women, and they always seem ready and willing to allow our competent decorators and salesmen to assist them in their selections.

$2,212,291 OF MILLIKEN ESTATE REMAINS FOR HEIRS

Appraiser's Report Shows Payment of $396,395 to Three Executors and $300,000 to Attorneys.

STATE INHERITANCE
TAX IS $96,407

Property of Chemical Manufacturer Once Was Estimated at $20,000,000—
Stocks Among Holdings.

The value of the estate of the late John T. Milliken, chemical manufacturer, now remaining to the heirs, is $2,212,291, as shown by the report of the appraiser named to assess the state inheritance tax against the estate. This report, filed yesterday in the Probate Court, showed also that the three executors had received $396,395.30 as commissions for administering the estate, and that $390,000 had been paid to attorneys, whose names were not shown in the report. This makes a total of $696,395.30 paid for administering the estate up to this time.

The three executors were John G. Lonsdale, president of the National Bank of Commerce, in which Milliken was a large stockholder; Dr. Hans W. Loeb, dean of the St. Louis University Medical School, who was Milliken's family physician and lifelong friend, and the National Bank of Commerce. The will provided that the bank should receive one-half the executor's fees, and that the other half should be divided equally between Lonsdale and Dr. Loeb. Under this provision, Dr. Loeb and Lonsdale would each receive more than $99,000 of the fees thus far paid.

The attorneys who have done most of the work in the administration of the estate, and who are believed to have received the greater part, if not all, of the $300,000 thus far paid to attorneys' fees, are Irvin V. Barth of 4939 West Pine boulevard, formerly of the firm of Leahy, Saunders & Barth; Forest P. Trailles of Vista Park; and William R. Gentry of 4157 Vernon avenue, member of the firm of Watts, Gentry & Lee.

Milliken died Jan. 31, 1919, at his home, 35 Portland place. His will left practically all his estate in trust for his wife, son and two daughters. If they should all die without heirs, the will provides that the estate shall go to Washington University to found scholarships.

Inheritance tax $96,407.

The value of Milliken's estate was estimated as high as $20,000,000 at one time. The inheritance tax appraiser's report names three estimated valuations—the par value, $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, the net market value of $5,000,000, and the sum remaining for the family after payments of $6,188,614.95, representing claims, executors' and attorneys' fees. This residue now left to the heirs is $2,212,291, and it was this amount on which the state inheritance tax was levied. The tax is $96,407.60. Henry A. Baker, an attorney, acted as appraiser, his fee being $150 and his expenses $151.

Of the $6,188,614.95, which has been paid out, about $5,000,000 was under the head of claims exempt from taxation.

Although the actual market value is far below the par or listed value of the estate, the market value could be increased by the advance in price of any of the securities in the estate, and such increased value would accrue to the beneficiaries under the will. No market value was placed by the appraiser on 7,091,123 shares of stock in the Afterthought Copper Co.

Realty Valued at $475,000.

A considerable gain was noted in the estate in that 3225 bonds of the San Antonio, Uvalde & Gulf Railroad, listed with a par value of $9025, were found by the appraisers to have a clear market value of $166,000.

The market value of the estate includes real estate valued at $475,000, the principal items of which are the residence at 1156 Belt avenue, $28,449; 25 Portland place, $75,000; 543 acres in St. Louis County, $150,000, and real estate at Third and Cedar streets, site of the Milliken Chemical Co., $325,000.

The net bequests for purposes of state tax assessments were as follows:

Mrs. May P. Milliken, the widow, $417,970, assessment $17,528.26;

John T. Milliken Jr., $218,726, assessment $12,536.30; daughter, Harriet, $229,245, assessment $12,567; daughter, Emily, $225,529, assessment $12,468.

The inheritance left to a possible grandchild was fixed by the appraiser at $719,214, and the tax on it was assessed at $38,592.81. Other beneficiaries were: U. S. McClelland, an employee of the Milliken company, $22,225, assessment $228.85, and a nephew, Louis R. Milliken, $12,181, assessment $1495.

MRS. ELIZABETH LOWENSTEIN, HIT BY CAR TUESDAY, DIES

Aunt of Judge Hartmann Suffered Fractured Skull in Accident When Crossing Street.

Mrs. Elizabeth Lowenstein, 78 years old, of 5336 Enright avenue, a widow, died at 5:15 p. m. yesterday at St. Luke's Hospital, from a fractured skull suffered last Tuesday when she was knocked down by an eastbound Delmar street car at Clarendon avenue and Delmar boulevard.

She was returning from the Washington Hotel, where she had visited friends, and was crossing Delmar from the south to the north side of the street. The motorman informed the police that when she was half way across the tracks she stopped to let a westbound vehicle pass, and that he was unable to stop the car in time to prevent hitting her.

Mrs. Lowenstein was an aunt of Circuit Judge Hartmann.

WOMAN SEEKING TO

MISS JOHANNA JONAS

Miss Johanna Jonas took Name of Her Foster Parents, Who Are Dead.

In an effort to learn her identity, as she knows nothing of her birth or parentage, a woman living as Miss Johanna Jonas of 821 Woodward avenue, Detroit, has written to the Post-Dispatch, enclosing her photograph.

The unknown girl took her name from her adopted parents. She was adopted at the age of one year by the Rev. and Mrs. John F. Jonas of 1910 Tyler street. Her foster father has told her that she was adopted from the Shier's College of Midwifery at Tenth and Monroe streets, and that she wore a red dress and red stockings.

Mrs. Jonas, however, on one occasion, said that the infant had been left in her charge by an aged woman claiming to be her grandmother, according to the letter.

Both the Rev. and Mrs. Jonas died a number of years ago. Miss Jonas gives the following description: "Thirty or 32 years old, 5 feet 4 inches tall, 155 pounds in weight, fair skin, with small mole on outer corner of left eye, gray-blue eyes and dark brown hair."

such organizations as the Manufacturers Association of St. Louis, Foreign Trade Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, Consular League, Traffic Managers Association and the World Trade Club, are to co-operate with the Mississippi Valley Association in arousing interest in behalf of the exhibit.

A series of public lectures on foreign trade, waterways, agriculture, internal development, transportation and allied subjects as pertaining to the United States, will be given daily by men of national prominence in their respective interests. A feature of the Merchant Marine show is to be the public christening during the week of the model vessel which has been named "City of St. Louis."

A prominent St. Louis society woman will be the sponsor. The date for the christening has not been set.

W. Lawson Guppy, designer and maker of the exhibition relief map, will commence work tomorrow in erecting the exhibit. Three standard freight cars were required to transport it to St. Louis.

The prominent feature of the exhibit will be the relief map, said by Shipping Board officials to be the largest of its kind in the world. It visualizes the development of the American Merchant Marine as a valuable medium through which an outlet may be speedily effected, with the aid of inland waterways, for the shipping of manufactured products in American bottoms to the ocean and foreign markets by the shortest routes. The sources of raw material of the world are also indicated on the map.

Official Data Used.

The research work, expressed in the completed map, was compiled from official records and data at Washington, in order that authentic and accurate detail could be secured with regard to geography, topography and climatic conditions of the universe.

The map proper consists of 26 panels. The panels are made of aluminum, and when they are set into position will cover a space 15 feet high and 42 feet long. The weight is approximately 2600 pounds. It pictures in colors the trade routes now covered by Government vessels and also depicts the distribution of vegetation and climatic conditions over the earth's surface, the temperature, velocity and direction of ocean currents, together with the comparative time and other advanced innovations so portrayed that the public may visualize the development of the American Merchant Marine and tributary waterways.

An original model of the map made of beeswax was used as a basis for casting of the exhibit map at the Government naval gun factory at Washington.

$30,000 ALIMONY DELIVERED BY DIVORCED HUSBAND IN $5 BILLS

Court Arranges for Deposit of Money Paid by Dr. Neff After Banks Had Closed.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—Dr. James M. Neff played a delicate little joke on his wife, Cora M. Neff, today, when he unloaded $30,000 in $5 bills upon her.

Dr. Neff, an internationally known surgeon, tried to get a divorce in the Australian courts, but failed. Then he tried in the courts of Switzerland and France, but failed in each case. He next began suit in Spokane, but lost there also.

Then Mrs. Neff swung into action and began divorce proceedings here. The court indicated today he would grant her a decree, and under the settlement she is to receive lump-sum alimony, in lieu of all claims, of $30,000. Of this sum $30,000 is in cash and the remainder in notes, insurance money and monthly allowance of $100.

"What will I do with all this money?" she complained, as the $30,000 was shown across the table. "The banks are closed and I have no place to keep it."

The court called up the First National Bank and arranged to have the money received there.

Mrs. Neff's attorney put in a bill for $5000, but the court cut it in half.

ROCKEFELLER FUND GIVES MANITOBA UNIVERSITY $500,000

It is Part of $5,000,000 Being Granted to Institutions Throughout Canada.

By the Associated Press.
WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 27.—Manitoba University will receive $500,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation for general endowment of the faculty of medicine, James A. McLean, president of the University, announced today.

The endowment is part of a $5,000,000 grant being made to Canadian universities, it was stated.

John D. Rockefeller has added $3,763,337.37 to his benefactions, it was announced in New York Nov. 24 by his son, John D. Rockefeller Jr. The newest contribution comes in the form of a fund for the fourth Rockefeller institution, the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial, incorporated Oct. 3, 1918, to continue the charitable enterprises that during her lifetime held the interest and obtained the aid of Mrs. Rockefeller. With the augmentation the known donations to charity and public welfare by Mr. Rockefeller Sr. now total about $475,000,000. The bulk of his benefactions have hitherto been divided among the older institutions he established, namely, the Rockefeller Foundation, the General Education Board and the Rockefeller Institute. Funds of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial will be devoted to the welfare of women and children and this work will not be confined to this country but will be world-wide.

COUNCIL OF SOCIAL AGENCIES REPORTS

Efficiency Body Will Attempt Budget for Own Office and Paid Staff.

Seven major accomplishments for the year are listed in "The Story of a Year's Work," the annual report for 1919-20 of the Council of Social Agencies, which is being distributed. Seventeen new agencies were admitted to the council, making the total 77.

The council will attempt next year to raise a budget large enough to secure its own office and paid executive staff. At present the offices are at the Chamber of Commerce. The council was organized in 1911 and is designed to make all local charities more efficient by means of prevention of duplication and taking the initiative in providing for new community needs.

The report sets forth that the council carried on propaganda and assisted in fixing amounts to be solicited for the construction of working girls' homes. Council efforts were responsible in part for the increase in the municipal farm bond issue from $500,000 to $1,500,000, the report declares. Reorganization and more efficient management of the Colored Orphans' Home was achieved by the council.

Through the council, the report says, public sentiment was aroused to the need for additional facilities for the care and treatment of mental defectives. This was done through publication of pamphlets dealing with the problem of subnormality and through petitions to the Board of Education to enlarge its work in caring for defectives and to the Red Cross to establish a bureau for the work.

New standards of admission were prepared, requiring that each member organization meet an unfulfilled need which could not be filled by extension of an existing agency. The work of member organizations must be in proportion to the amount of funds expended.

The seventh major achievement listed is the investigation of several social agencies.

These new agencies were admitted to the council: Bethesda Charities, Big Brother Organization, Big Sister Organization, Board of Religious Organizations, Catherine Springer Home, Catholic Woman's League, Council of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Association, Greeley Memorial Institutional Church, International Institute Y. W. C. A., Jewish Federation, Jewish Hospital, Jewish Orphans' Home, Letmar Club, Missouri Association for Occupational Therapy, People's Home, Urban League (Colored), Young Men's Hebrew Association.

JUDGE KIMMEL GIVES COST OF HIS CAMPAIGN AS $2016

Defeated Candidate in Recent Election Gave $960 to the City Committee.

Circuit Judge Karl Kimmel, one of the "three K's" who was defeated in the election Nov. 2, yesterday filed in the Recorder's office a statement of campaign expenditures in his effort to be re-elected, showing that he spent $2016. The Republican City Committee received $960 from Kimmel.

Kimmel, William H. Killoren and Chauncey J. Krueger were the three K's opposed in a city-wide movement led by the League of Women Voters because of the espousal of their candidacies in the primary and the election by the "courthouse ring" and city hall element of the Republican organization. Killoren was the only one of the three elected.

Other candidates who filed statements of expenditures yesterday were: Richard A. Jones, Democrat, defeated for Circuit Judge, $128.10; Lawrence McDaniel, Democrat, defeated for Circuit Attorney, $203.60; E. W. Allen, Farmer-Worker, defeated for Congress in the Eleventh District, $301.

25,000 PERSONS AT OPENING OF LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

International Competition at Chicago Amphitheater Attracts 10,000 Entries.

By the Associated Press.
CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—More than 10,000 entries filled the amphitheater of the International Livestock Exposition when the annual exhibition opened today. Two stock judging contests, one for collegians and another for noncollegiate, were the center of attraction, although an estimated crowd of 25,000 people viewed the stalls of cattle, horses, sheep and swine.

In the noncollegiate contest Little Mary Josephine Carr, 10 years old, of Stockton, Ill., was the youngest entry. She had brought along her own entry, Angus, which she fed and tended like a pet. Jennie Turner of Fairfax, Mo., each 12 years old, were also among the contestants.

Thousands of exhibits of corn, oats, wheat and barley comprised the grain and hay show. In connection with the livestock exhibition, a prize of $10,000 has been offered by the Chicago Board of Trade to grain entries and the "corn king" title is being sought by over 800 farmers.

Efficient Terminal Plants Are Needed to Make River Freight Traffic Profitable

General Hines Points Out Requirements; New Bureau Expected to Care for Government Efforts.

By Gen. Frank T. Hines.

THE late war demonstrated forcefully the need for interior transportation by water. It opened the eyes of economists to the real importance of this branch of our industrial organization. More than that, however, it made clear that the success of waterway transportation on a large scale could only be assured by constructive and continuous aid from the Federal Government in the operating phase as well as on the engineering and construction side.

The distinction between waterway development and waterway transportation development thus became apparent. The waterway itself is one thing, and the waterway as a path for an extensive waterway traffic is quite another thing. While desiring to bring about the latter, we had actually been directing our efforts only toward the former. Yet between the two there is a wide gulf requiring radically different treatment to attain the desired result.

Construction Work.

For years the corps of engineers carried on such construction work as Congress periodically authorized, building new channels and keeping the old ones open. Other bureaus of the Government have compiled statistics and directed attention to the possibilities of waterway transportation. Official and private commissions and associations have urged the development of one waterway project or another.

No properly constituted agency, however, had for its function in the past the supervision of private operations on these waterways in the same manner as the national banks are supervised from Washington. No comprehensive attempt had been made to render the operators of boats on inland waterways the public aid which was extended to railroads in the early state of their development. We were content to build a waterway or improve a channel, then to depend upon private initiative to supply the service for which the waterway was improved.

The interior water traffic situation which existed in 1917 was the logical result of such a policy, and proved that if our waterways are important enough to warrant the vast sums which we expend annually on their maintenance, they are important enough to justify the expenditure of further money to insure the establishment of self-sustaining traffic upon them.

Transportation Statute.

In framing the transportation act, which provided for the termination of Federal control of rail lines, Congress attempted to take advantage of the experience of the Government in operating the railroads by doing as much as could be done by legislation toward correcting in the future what was recognized to be the evils of the past.

From beginning to end this act may be paraphrased to read "transportation facilities of the nation shall no longer be the plaything of capitalists. They constitute an indispensable public utility; henceforth they shall be treated as such. They can best be operated by private enterprise, but the people, whom they serve, hereafter shall be responsible that they procure a reasonable return on the capital invested in them, that they shall charge reasonable rates for services rendered, and that those services shall be as efficient as is physically possible."

Provision of Act.

The act, in addition to applying these conditions to the railroads, also provided that steps be taken by the Government toward aiding waterway traffic to such an extent that it might eventually rank relatively with the railroads as a servant of commerce. For this purpose the Secretary of War was directed to undertake the promotion of inland waterway traffic, specifically in conjunction with the continued operation of rail lines under private control. The scope of the work here involved may best be appreciated from the following extract from the act:

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging and developing inland waterway transportation facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, to in-investigate the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of such waterways; to investigate the subject of water terminals, both for inland waterway traffic and for through traffic by water and rail, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment and appliances in connection therewith, and also railroad spurs and switches connecting with such terminals, with a view to devising the types most appropriate for different locations, and for the more expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities, cities and towns regarding the appropriate location of such terminals, and to cooperate with them in the preparation of plans for suitable terminal facilities; to investigate the existing status of water transportation upon the different inland waterways of the country, with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity, and to what extent they are meeting the demands of traffic, and whether the water carriers utilizing such waterways are interchanging traffic with the railroads; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation. It shall also be the province and duty of the Secretary of War to compile, publish and distribute, from time to time, such useful statistics, data and information concerning transportation on inland waterways as he may deem to be of value to the commercial interests of the country."

The fourth of a series of five articles, written for the Post-Dispatch by Gen. Frank T. Hines, late Chief of Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service, War Department, analyzing the national inland waterway traffic situation.

Special Bureau Formed.

In order that these functions might be most properly carried out independent of the routine of purely military affairs, the Secretary of War has organized a special bureau nominally for the Department of War, known as the Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service.

The duties of this bureau, therefore, include (a) the operation of the waterway lines which the Government now controls and their development until they have become profitably self-sustaining, as well as the inauguration of new routes; and (b) the assistance of private operators on inland waterways—rendering such aid as is specified in the foregoing and in other sections of the transportation act.

What is being done in the operation of freight service on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers and on the New York canals has already been outlined in a preceding article.

One new Government barge line has been quietly inaugurated this fall, however, which requires special mention—the Intra-Coastal Service on the inside route between Baltimore, Norfolk and Beaufort, N. C.

Inside Water Route.

The need for an inside water route from Maine to Florida, while even now keenly felt, will become more and more urgent as industrial congestion increases in the East. Such a route has practically all been planned for a long time—in fact, it really had its inception with a report made by Secretary of the Treasury Albert Gallatin in 1808. The present Government freight service over a portion of the Intra-Coastal route will accomplish much, indeed, if it serves as a permanent

Germany's Greatest Business Man Has Fascinating Plan for Restoring His Country UNIFIES SIMILAR INDUSTRIES IN SAME REGIONS

Hugo Stinnes Calls Centralization Scheme of Socialism Fatal, but Says This Plan Would Greatly Increase Production and Efficiency While Insuring Undreamed-of Economy.

By Mail From the Berlin Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch and the New York World.
BERLIN, Nov. 1.

THERE is only one man in Germany today with a really big idea, a practical reconstruction plan, for saving Germany from what he otherwise believes inevitable economic catastrophe, breakup and utter ruin. He is Hugo Stinnes, Germany's greatest captain of industry since the revolution, reputed to be Germany's first mark millionaire; owner of coal mines, iron mines, iron and steel works, electrical works, steamship line, shipbuilding plants, forests, wood pulp and print paper plants and a chain of more than 60 newspapers throughout Germany, in addition to a swarm of other miscellaneous trifles picked up at bargain prices since Germany's military collapse; organizing and big business genius of the first water and the most powerful man in Germany today, being incidentally also the "Boss" of the German People's Party, member of the Reichstag, member of the National Coal Council and of the National Economic Council.

The other day Stinnes broke his long silence to tell the world, through his own personal organ, the Deutsche Allgemeine Gazette, which paradoxically is also the semi-official mouthpiece of the German Government, his views of Germany's troubles and his cure, as outlined at the last session of the National Economic Council.

Standing to lose more than a billion marks if the smash comes, Stinnes is unequivocally pessimistic about Germany today.

"The present situation must, above all, be judged from the standpoint of our financial position, the status of our mark," Stinnes said. "At the time of the Spa conference one could buy a dollar for 24 marks; today, the dollar costs 70 marks. If this development continues, it is a consequence of the Spa conference—one must calculate with the fact that within a few months the value of our mark, its purchasing power, will have sunk so low that for an indefinite period of time we shall not be in a position to buy food or raw materials abroad. When that is the case we shall come to a pure system of barter, of exchange of goods, with foreign countries. Then it will be a question of life and death whether Germany can produce enough or not."

Problem to Increase Production

Stinnes accordingly sees Germany's reconstruction as essentially the problem to increase production in Germany. And the heart of the general production problem is to increase basic production.

Production depends on three keystone occupations—on coal mining, on transportation, and on things as now—on the building trade for the next years, too. "We are compelled to make these three more efficient; they must under all circumstances produce more. Temporarily, that can only be accomplished by longer working hours. I must with all frankness utter this truth, unpleasant as its execution may be. Whatever measures are taken in the immediate future which may have the effect of decreasing production in Germany instead of very materially increasing production can literally signify death for millions of the German people. Without increase in production I consider civil war by no means out of the question. The responsibility which must now be assumed is much greater than the responsibility which was assumed when the outworn Constitution of Germany was changed."

Production can't be increased under the system of "centralization" as practiced under the republic, according to Stinnes. Scoring the inefficiency of centralized state control, he says:

"We have certain experiences behind us. Not before the outbreak of the revolution, but only after the revolution, after the autocratic state had ceased to exist, did the organs of state function with the present sorry results. Take our experience with the National Coal Council. Its one great task was activity in the settlements question."

(Herr Stinnes here refers to the rapid building of model settlements, barracks, housing and other living accommodations for thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional miners in the coal regions—an absolute prerequisite to any very great increase in coal production.—Editor's note.)

"In this matter was shown the efficiency of the system of centralized economy."

Lesson From Experience With Coal

"Let us see what happened," Stinnes goes on ironically. "In the spring of 1919 the National Coal Council wanted to start the mining settlements work. We moved heaven and earth. But the hopelessly sorry results are known. If we had been able to work as we wanted to, the necessary miners' houses would be standing today in the Rhineland and Westphalia. They would have been standing there as a matter of course, if we hadn't worked centrally."

HUGO STINNES.

essary miners' houses would be standing today in the Rhineland and Westphalia. They would have been standing there as a matter of course, if we hadn't worked centrally."

After this slam at the bureaucratic red tape and functional inefficiency of the "centralized" system of economy as centralized under the Berlin Government, Stinnes offered the following general remedy for Germany's economic troubles: "The changes and improvements in present-day conditions, which would in the long run result in increased production, can, in my opinion, only be attained by bringing consumers and producers into close relations, yes, even into the most intimate relations." As a model example of what he means, Stinnes cited one of his own recent "consolidation" feats:

"I have in mind the union of the Rhenish-Westphalian electrical works, the Rodder coal mine and the Gelsenkirchen Mining Co. with the Deutsch-Luxembourg Mining Co. This was a consolidation of the kind I spoke of above, bringing consumers and producers into the most intimate relations. It must be the precursor of other similar consolidations and union of producers and consumers. Only in this way can our economy get ahead. I want to illustrate this by a practical example."

"For years the Rhenish-Westphalian electrical works fought to obtain a larger coal supply from the Rodder mine. We wanted 1,500,000 tons more annually, equivalent to 300,000,000 kilowatt hours, which were lacking to fully supply the electric power requirements of Rhineland-Westphalia. We couldn't get it because of the idiotic policy of the National Economics Ministry, combined with the purely private economic policy of the Rodder mine's stockholders."

Would Reorganize the Coal Mines

"I have elsewhere cited the example of the German shipping companies, which received 17,000,000,000 marks subsidy from the Government for rebuilding the merchant marine, and to which, after the first newly built ships had been placed in commission, the National Coal Commissioner refused the necessary coal, referring them to bunkering stations abroad. I can't reproach the Coal Commissioner; he can't do anything else. As long as we don't break with the system whereby one central bureau systematically rations the coal, thereby making it impossible for larger or smaller concerns, by raising the necessary large capital and by technology and intelligence, to increase the coal supply and dispose of such increase, so long will the state of things which we have today in Germany be permanent."

"For me it is absolutely clear that the present authoritative factors, the erroneous policy of the economics ministry and the purely private economic interests of a few individual concerns or stockholders must not in future be permitted to influence decisively our coal economics. We have recognized this error and want to do away with it; the more efficient reorganization and operation of our coal mines, of our whole coal economy, in the interest of all, that is the socialism which at bottom is wanted by all. Under no circumstances must the importance of individuals be underrated. In economic life the impulse always proceeds from a very few persons."

Referring to the proposed scheme to socialize Germany's coal mines, Stinnes said: "If you switch me into such a scheme I shall very soon be good for nothing; if I am transferred to a different 'milieu' I shall lose my efficiency. I could much easier work for the common cause without pay as a private citizen than I could as an employee of a multitude of people who understand nothing about the matter."

Stinnes gave the following admonition to Socialists who might want to put their theories into practice:

"Even if you could at the present time get a few people in Germany who are not only specialists, but who have such a broad knowledge of the needs of the whole German national economy so they could temporarily fulfill their task, yet would Germany's economy necessarily die later on along with these few people, because a centralistic system won't produce any successors to them."

Where Socialism Is a Failure

"If one wants to create a great new enterprise anywhere one asks two preliminary questions: First, who is the man who will accomplish it? Secondly, where are the high-grade workers? If one can't find both, one keeps one's hands off that enterprise. This division we must also have in future. You must leave to the projector what is the projector's—namely, leadership; and we must see to it that labor gets as large gains as possible, at least a good living, out of the enterprise."

"We have also made mistakes in another direction. We must see to it that the best brains among the workers are in future educated and trained so that these workers can take their places in the higher positions. It's a curious phenomenon that, in general, the wealth of parents doesn't have exactly a good influence on the mental development of their children. Whoever rightly appreciates this must see to it that out of the depths of the soup bowl of labor the fat spots shall come to the top and be enabled to take the place of the used-up rich families."

"The centralized economic system doesn't lead to the goal; it is merely a system of dividing, of rationing. I return to the two examples of the Rhenish-Westphalian electric works and the shipping companies. They show that whoever has a lively interest in increased coal production is likewise in first-line position to supply the necessary capital for increasing coal production. I have no doubt that if our maritime concerns had been able to tie up with a big coal-mining concern, they would also have been able to raise the capital necessary to increase the coal production if it could have kept such increase of production for its purposes. That's what happened at Rhenish-Westphalian electrical works, which is now raising the 30,000,000 marks necessary to increase the production of the allied Rodder coal mine by the needed 1,500,000 tons."

Consumers and Producers

"What does this example teach us? We must round up and organize our consumers, who consume coal in the form of electricity, gas, water or transportation, into great concerns covering the largest possible areas. I will call them state electrical companies, state gas companies, state transportation companies. These companies must have industrial leadership and boards of directors, state and communities must be majority stockholders. To these I would give the right, and impose it as a duty, to secure for a long period of time and under all circumstances, the basis of their power, be it black, brown or white (anthracite coal, soft coal or water power). For such mutual economic consolidations you would literally have Socialism—namely, economy management. To such concerns I would give a right to use for themselves 90 per cent of the increased coal production which they might bring about; the other 10 per cent to be made available for the generality."

As a practical illustration of Stinnes' plan, Stinnes would have all the electrical power works in the States of Wurttemberg and Baden (which logically form an economic unit) organized into one huge state electric company, with practical industrial leaders running the whole show, but the majority of the stock owned and controlled by the States of Wurttemberg and Baden and by all interested cities, towns and communities. This gigantic state-municipal-private electric trust (local, however, in Wurttemberg and Baden) is, then, according to Stinnes' plan, to tie up, under long-term contract and on intimate community of interest terms almost tantamount to a consolidation or absorption with some coal-mining company, to which it will furnish the capital necessary for increasing the latter's coal production, of which it then can dispose for its own uses over 90 per cent of the increased production. Stinnes would similarly have all the gas works of Wurttemberg and Baden organized into one great concern and form an organic union with the source of its fuel supply. And so on.

Stinnes figures that these pseudo-Socialistic, powerful organizations of coal consumers, backed by the credit of the federated states and municipalities, as well as of many private stockholders,

Great Bird Reservation in Louisiana World's Largest Sanctuary for Wild Life

Plans Under Way to Increase the Size of the Preserve to 500 Square Miles, With Frontage on Gulf of 75 Miles.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 27.

THE most extensive sanctuary for wild life in the United States and the largest of its kind in the world has been established in Louisiana. Designed especially as a haven for migratory and domestic birds, a tract of land embracing 224,000 acres has been set aside as a perpetual reservation, and plans are already under way which will result eventually in the addition of sufficient land to increase the size of the preserve to 500 square miles.

On Nov. 8 deeds were signed in the office of the State Conservation Commission which gave to the State in fee simple Marsh Island, 79,300 acres in extent; the Grand Chenier tract, 55,000 acres, and the Ward McIlhenny tract, 60,000 acres. The State is already acquiring land adjoining these tracts, with the assurance that at least 320,000 acres will be acquired.

Nowhere in this country has a project of this magnitude for the preservation of wild life been undertaken, and only in South Africa, where the British Government has set aside large tracts as reservations, can its equal be found. In South Africa, however, little care is given the birds and beasts, while in Louisiana game wardens will look after both, with especial attention to rare species.

Long-Matured Plan.

The plan for the reservation had its inception in the mind of Edward Avery McIlhenny, and he has lived to see its complete fruition, to be present as the deeds were signed, and to lend his aid to the working out of a system of protection for its creatures that seek refuge in this great sanctuary.

Years ago McIlhenny and a friend, Charles Willis Ward, who was visiting him at his home in Vermilion Parish, looked over the proposition of setting aside a tract of wild land as a haven for birds and the smaller mammals, which were threatened with extinction through their uncontrolled slaughter by market hunters and trappers. The result of this establishment was the setting aside of the Ward-McIlhenny tract of 60,000 acres.

Control of this reservation was given to Commissioner Alexander, who held the same office he holds today, with the suggestion that 13,000 acres be used as a game farm. Commissioner Alexander fell in with the plan readily, and with the aid of Messrs. Ward and McIlhenny the tract was put into operation as a shelter for birds, particularly the migratory species, which had for generations found a comfortable winter home in the bayous and marshes of the region.

So successful was the operation of the reservation in increasing the number of birds and in saving rare species from extinction that McIlhenny decided to make a trip to New York and try to gain further support for his project. In the late Mrs. Russell Sage he found a willing helper. A lifelong lover of birds, Mrs. Sage saw in the Louisiana man's plan a chance to do a great deal towards conserving the bird life not only of Louisiana, but of the many states from whose borders birds fly each fall to seek refuge in the warmer climate.

Mrs. Sage Buys an Island.

Marsh Island, 79,300 acres in extent, lying in the Gulf of Mexico off the coast of Iberia, St. Mary and Vermilion parishes, its northern and eastern shores forming East Cote, West Cote and Vermilion bays, waters famous as the haunts of migratory wild fowl during the winter months, was purchased by Mrs. Sage, and its care given over to Commissioner Alexander. Mrs. Sage aided financially in the administration of the preserve; and it, together with the nearby Ward-McIlhenny tract, soon became the undisturbed home of untold numbers of birds and animals.

McIlhenny next went to the Rockefeller Foundation and asked for an appropriation for the purchase of another tract, known as the Grand Chenier, and consisting of 55,000 acres on the mainland adjoining the Ward-McIlhenny reservation, and close to Provision in Agreement.

A clause in the deed of gift provides that in the event of discovery of minerals or oil on the preserve, mines or wells must be operated so as to cause a minimum of disturbance to the birds and animals, and profits accruing from such enterprises must be used to further the protection of wild life. If more money is made from this source than is needed for its original purpose, it is to be devoted to education or public health in the State.

In all the development of the project, McIlhenny and Commissioner Alexander have had the active cooperation of John M. Parker, who is the present Governor of Louisiana, and who has been prominent in the political and business life of the State for years. In his present office Gov. Parker will assist Commissioner Alexander in extending the reservation and in furnishing a full measure of protection for its denizens.

Commissioner Alexander said recently that the reservation would undoubtedly form the greatest bird sanctuary in the world. While the protection of mammals is of secondary importance in the project, it is recognized that many of the smaller species will be saved from extinction by the opportunity afforded them to escape from pot-hunters and trappers.

In the sheltered bays that surround Marsh Island and on the winding bayous and small lakes that are found over all the vast area of the reservation, water fowl of scores of species are today finding refuge. There the blue goose, a species that was on the verge of extinction a few years ago, is found in large flocks, feeding unmolested after its long journey each fall from Labrador, where it nests.

Mallards by the thousands, teal, both blue and green winged, coots, pintails, and scaups, find a haven there, and their winters are undisturbed periods of rest, for no hunter's gun sends them into a panic as they fly in their peculiar formation over the wide stretches of marsh and bay.

Old-Time Slaughterers.

In other days, before the tract was set aside as a haven for these Southern visitors, their winters were anything but pleasant, for the pot-hunter was ever in pursuit, and the roar of his 8 and 10 gauge guns brought death to untold thousands of them, particularly to the mallards, most highly esteemed of the wild ducks for the market.

Not content with shooting the ducks on the wing and taking a reasonable kill each day, the pot-hunters slaughtered the birds while they were feeding quietly, and so plentiful were they that their dead bodies were used as bait for traps set to catch possums, coons, otter, muskrat, mink and other small fur-bearing animals.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

"America."

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
I read with great interest and no little amusement the reply which was brought forth by my recent letter relative to our national hymn. I feel deeply grateful to Mr. Spess, the writer of this reply, for bringing this matter to light as he has for it is a regrettable fact that there are thousands of others who have been similarly misinformed on this subject, and his remarks present an opportunity to place the true facts before the people.

I do not doubt the authenticity of Mr. Spess' quotation from the Rev. Samuel F. Smith, author of "America," but I wish to advise him that, in jumping to the conclusion that the adoption of this melody by the British as their national anthem was subsequent to its adoption by the Rev. Smith to the words of "America," he is very much in error. For his information and that of all others who are interested in this really important subject, I wish to quote the following extract from Col. Nicholas Smith's "Stories of Great National Songs": "In September, 1745, 'God Save the King' was sung, with tremendous enthusiasm at Drury Lane, and from that hour to this it has held the first place among the national anthems of the world." And the following from Moore's Cyclopaedia of Music: "It has been generally believed that Henry Carey was the author. . . . The words with the air appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine in 1745, when the landing of young Stuart called forth expressions of loyalty from the adherents of the reigning family."

Although the real origins of both the words and music of "God Save the King" probably date back much farther than this, I give the above to show that it was actually sung as the national anthem of Great Britain more than 20 years before our country was in existence. There is no one who admits this grand melody more than the writer, and certainly the soul-inspiring words of the Rev. Samuel F. Smith fit it far better than the ordinary wording of "God Save the King." But I wish to repeat that it is England's national hymn and not ours, and I hope to see the day when our greatest of all national anthems, "The Star-Spangled Banner," will be recognized as such by all of the people of our country and played by our orchestras on all occasions which call for the national hymn of the United States.

A Powerful Cartoon.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
Many of your cartoons of current events are very interesting and some help us to get a keener insight into the meaning of present-day happenings.

The cartoon by Fitzpatrick of the vacant chair in Geneva, placed there by our war sacrifices and anxieties, is a powerful patriotic appeal and a most excellent sermon. It is one of the most powerful cartoons I have ever seen. I hope it will be widely reproduced in America and Europe.

"Divine Love."

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
Having heard many speak of the term "Divine Love," I have therefore thought deeply on the matter, and, of course, what we really and sincerely think about it we usually understand, for the reason that thought, when refined and concentrated, becomes of its very nature, must become clear.

Therefore, what is the simple meaning of Divine Love? Answer: Divine Love is not a sentimental grudging or pious feeling; neither is it a weak or false sympathy; nor is it based on any false ecstasy. Divine Love is a deep and tender compassion for all men. A broad and sympathetic spirit of willing helpfulness toward the human family and all other living creatures. One of the main characteristics of Divine Love is that it is not restricted or limited to anyone's family or friends, nor for those of a like religious belief, nationality or race. Neither is Divine Love confined to the human family, but to all living creatures—to man, animal, bird, everything that lives, moves and breathes. This is the Christ Love that embraces all the love that does not find fault or criticism, complain at or condemn the sin or sinner or those who do not attend church, but forgives all and thus sets the sinner free.

Therefore, to really practice Divine Love, one must "be thou and do likewise." — JACK HENNING.

Europe's Starving Children.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
Your article on the Literary Digest child-feeding fund has reached many people who do not read the Digest, and but for you would never have known of contributed to the pressing need. You have done much good already. Can you not write another editorial on the subject, and would it not be possible to get many smaller papers to copy it? So many would gladly help if they knew about it, and small papers go about many homes where the Literary Digest is unknown.

THE MERCHANTS' MOVE.

A sound plan has been proposed by St. Louis business men for reinvigorating American industry. The plan is simply this—that Mr. American Merchant get back his nerve, go into the market, place his orders for his spring goods, and do it now.

Has the American merchant lost his nerve? If it was a banker who said this, or a lawyer, or doctor, or editor, the merchant might resent it. But it happens to be a St. Louis merchant who said it, the head of one of the big mercantile organizations of the country. The remedy suggested is of his own prescribing. He is taking his own medicine. He earnestly recommends that all other merchants do likewise. Indeed, he acknowledges that the efficacy of his plan depends upon its general adoption. It must be a nation-wide movement.

As this merchant diagnoses it, the present situation is largely the result of the timidity of merchants. They are hesitating to buy now. They believe that by waiting till the last minute they can buy cheaper. Meantime, the absence of orders which ought to be placed now, is poisoning the entire industrial system. The shelves of jobbers are groaning with goods that ought to be in transit, or at least sold. The timidity of the merchants has infected the jobbers, who are also postponing their orders. The consequence is that the manufacturers in many lines have nothing to work on and are running their plants on reduced time, with reduced forces, or, in some instances, closing down altogether.

Fear, the genesis of panic, is on the job. What is needed is courage, marshalled by judgment. Courage and judgment are the indispensable attributes of business success, yet for several abnormal years the American business man has not had to exercise either of those attributes very much. Little acumen has been required to do business, with prices steadily rising and in the face of assured demand. That time is gone. The American business man has got to take off his coat now and get right down to it. Discretion, foresight, vigilance, management and nerve—those constituted his equipment by which he won his success, and those qualities must be drafted back into service now.

Of course, the merchant must have the support of the banker in his legitimate enterprise. That goes without saying. Happily, with our present banking system, the banker can stand behind the merchant. Our modern financial machinery enables him to do so. The spectacle of solvent business houses crashing down into insolvency because the necessary money was unavailable belongs to the archaic past.

It is the American merchant's move. As soon as he moves, with a quick, confident stride, the effect will be magical. Immediately the jobber will get into motion, and his appearance in the market means that the manufacturer will be stimulated, and, in prosperous sequence labor will be employed on full time and good wages, which money will find its way into the merchant's till.

There is no serious physical defect in American industry. We have had bountiful crops. We have more money than ever before, more people, greater productive capacity, greater needs to be supplied. The present panic is largely psychological. But the people are not going to stop eating food, wearing clothes, getting married and replenishing the earth.

The American merchant should kick his blue devils out the door, administering a particularly well-placed kick to the black pit of fear, and begin betting on the United States.

THE RHINELAND OCCUPATION.

Dr. Simon, German Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has complained in a public address of the "unnecessary, harsh and intolerably costly" occupation of strategic Rhineland territory by the late enemies, and the German press seems to have taken up the lament in chorus, pointing out that the expense in the last 12 months has been more than 20,000,000,000 marks.

The foreign forces now in German territory, adjacent to the bridgeheads of Cologne, Coblenz and Mainz, number but 145,000, of whom France has 100,000, Belgium 20,000, England 15,000 and the United States 10,000. By the terms of the treaty of Versailles Germany is compelled to pay for the maintenance of such forces as the allied and associated Powers deemed necessary to quarter upon her as a means of enforcing the reparation and other clauses. The number might, therefore, be many times as large.

In the light of history, not to mention the present exigencies, there can be no sound ground for complaint by Germany of the size of the occupying army. By the treaty of Paris of 1815, it will be recalled, the grand allies maintained an army of 150,000 men in France, at her expense, until satisfied of the re-establishment of internal tranquillity.

If the policy of the Entente allies is harsh, what is to be said of Germany's dealings with France as a beaten enemy in 1871? By the treaty of Frankfurt of that year, the occupying German forces to be maintained by France were 500,000 men and 150,000 horses. An indemnity of 5,000,000,000 francs was demanded, with no transfer of trust to a reparations commission, but a holding fast to the property of the debtor state until the enormous sum was paid in full. The sum was to be handed over in installments of 500,000,000 francs in 30 days; 1,000,000,000 within one year; 500,000,000 by May 1, 1872, and 2,000,000,000 by March 2, 1874, with interest at 5 per cent.

Meantime on condition of no default in payment, the occupying German troops were to be reduced in number successively from 500,000 men and 150,000 horses to 150,000 men and 50,000 horses, to 120,000 men and 40,000 horses, to 80,000 men and 30,000 horses. Fortunately for France, prompt payment of the whole sum in an incredibly short time brought about a reluctant evacuation in 1873.

The lesson which Germany has failed fully to learn out of her own experience is that good faith in complying with the terms of the treaty, in so far as compliance is possible, offers the hope of speediest relief from the burden of occupation.

THE LEAGUE'S PROGRESS.

Secretary Colby's protest against the use of mandates for the special advantage of the mandatory nations and without reference to other nations is practically endorsed by the Council of the League of Nations. The League has given control of the commission on mandates to nonmandatory nations.

The whole spirit of the mandatory scheme as created in the treaty is contrary to any exploitation of peoples and territories under mandate. It was designed to help and protect struggling peoples and to develop the peoples of colonies. The immediate object is aid and the ultimate goal self-government and independence.

The commission, headed by Leon Bourgeois, is ready to report the plan for an international court, with a few amendments adopted by the Council, the chief of which is limiting the court's jurisdiction by the will of disputants. No nation will be forced to submit its case, but the pressure of moral opinion will be so strong that no nation can refuse to submit a justiciable question to the court.

The League is making progress. In the main, its action has been ruled by wisdom and prudence and by respect for the rights and opinions of member nations, even the weakest.

One of the greatest advances marked by the creation of the League is the Assembly, where the representatives of all member nations meet and discuss world conditions, international questions and consider the welfare of the world. We are assured hereafter freedom of debate and publicity for questions which hitherto have been settled in secret councils by the diplomats of great Powers. We cannot yet realize fully the tremendous value of this privilege of free public debate, nor the radical change to free discussion by representatives of all nations from secret diplomacy of a few imperial dictators of world affairs, moved by national greed and ambition.

We predict that mankind will not consent to go back to the old order and the nation out of co-operation with the new order will be in an untenable position before the bar of world opinion.

"THE GOAL, NOT THE PRIZE."

In a laudatory estimate of President Wilson's service to the world, Maximilian Harden, the picturesque German editor, acutely phrases a great truth when he says that Wilson "gave to the world a goal." The other dominant figures were concerned, primarily, with the prize.

That this truth, so vehemently disputed now, will eventually win the sanction of history is affirmed by history. Harden speaks of Marcus Aurelius visioning a better day for people and challenging asks, "Where did high endeavor attain the place on the first attempt?" But it is unnecessary to go back to antiquity for the harsh blundering of contemporary verdict which the calmer, saner judgment of posterity has reversed. All history is replete with analogies.

Not the prize of winning the war, but the goal of a world freed from war, was the Wilson objective. That objective will be attained, and in its attainment the place of Woodrow Wilson will be secure.

COASTWISE TOLLS AND PANAMA PROFITS.

The Panama Canal was operated last year at a net profit of $2,387,599 over all current expenses, more than 5 per cent on its cost of $366,650,000, not including the cost of fortifications. However, the interest on canal bonds and other expenses are apparently not included in operating expenses.

Figures showing the percentage of receipts from coastwise vessels under the United States flag are not given, but they must amount to a considerable fraction of the whole. Just when a reopening of the old discussion on remitting the tolls on such vessels is threatened, the figures are especially interesting.

To disturb so satisfactory a balance sheet when the canal for the first time is beginning to pay expenses and vindicate itself as a national investment seems unbusinesslike. As soon as the balance sheet can justify it, a reduction in tolls on all vessels, those conveying products to South America as well as those plying between American ports, seems preferable. Tolls were once charged at the costly canals in the connecting waterways of the Great Lakes, but were abolished after some substantial portion of their original cost had been met. For many years these canals have been free to all vessels, Canadian as well as American, with results which the consumers of toll-less commodities have had benefits. Maybe someday Uncle Sam can afford to make an unexampled gift to the commerce of the world by permitting not only vessels under our own flag, but vessels under the flags that fly the ocean to pass the Panama waterway free.

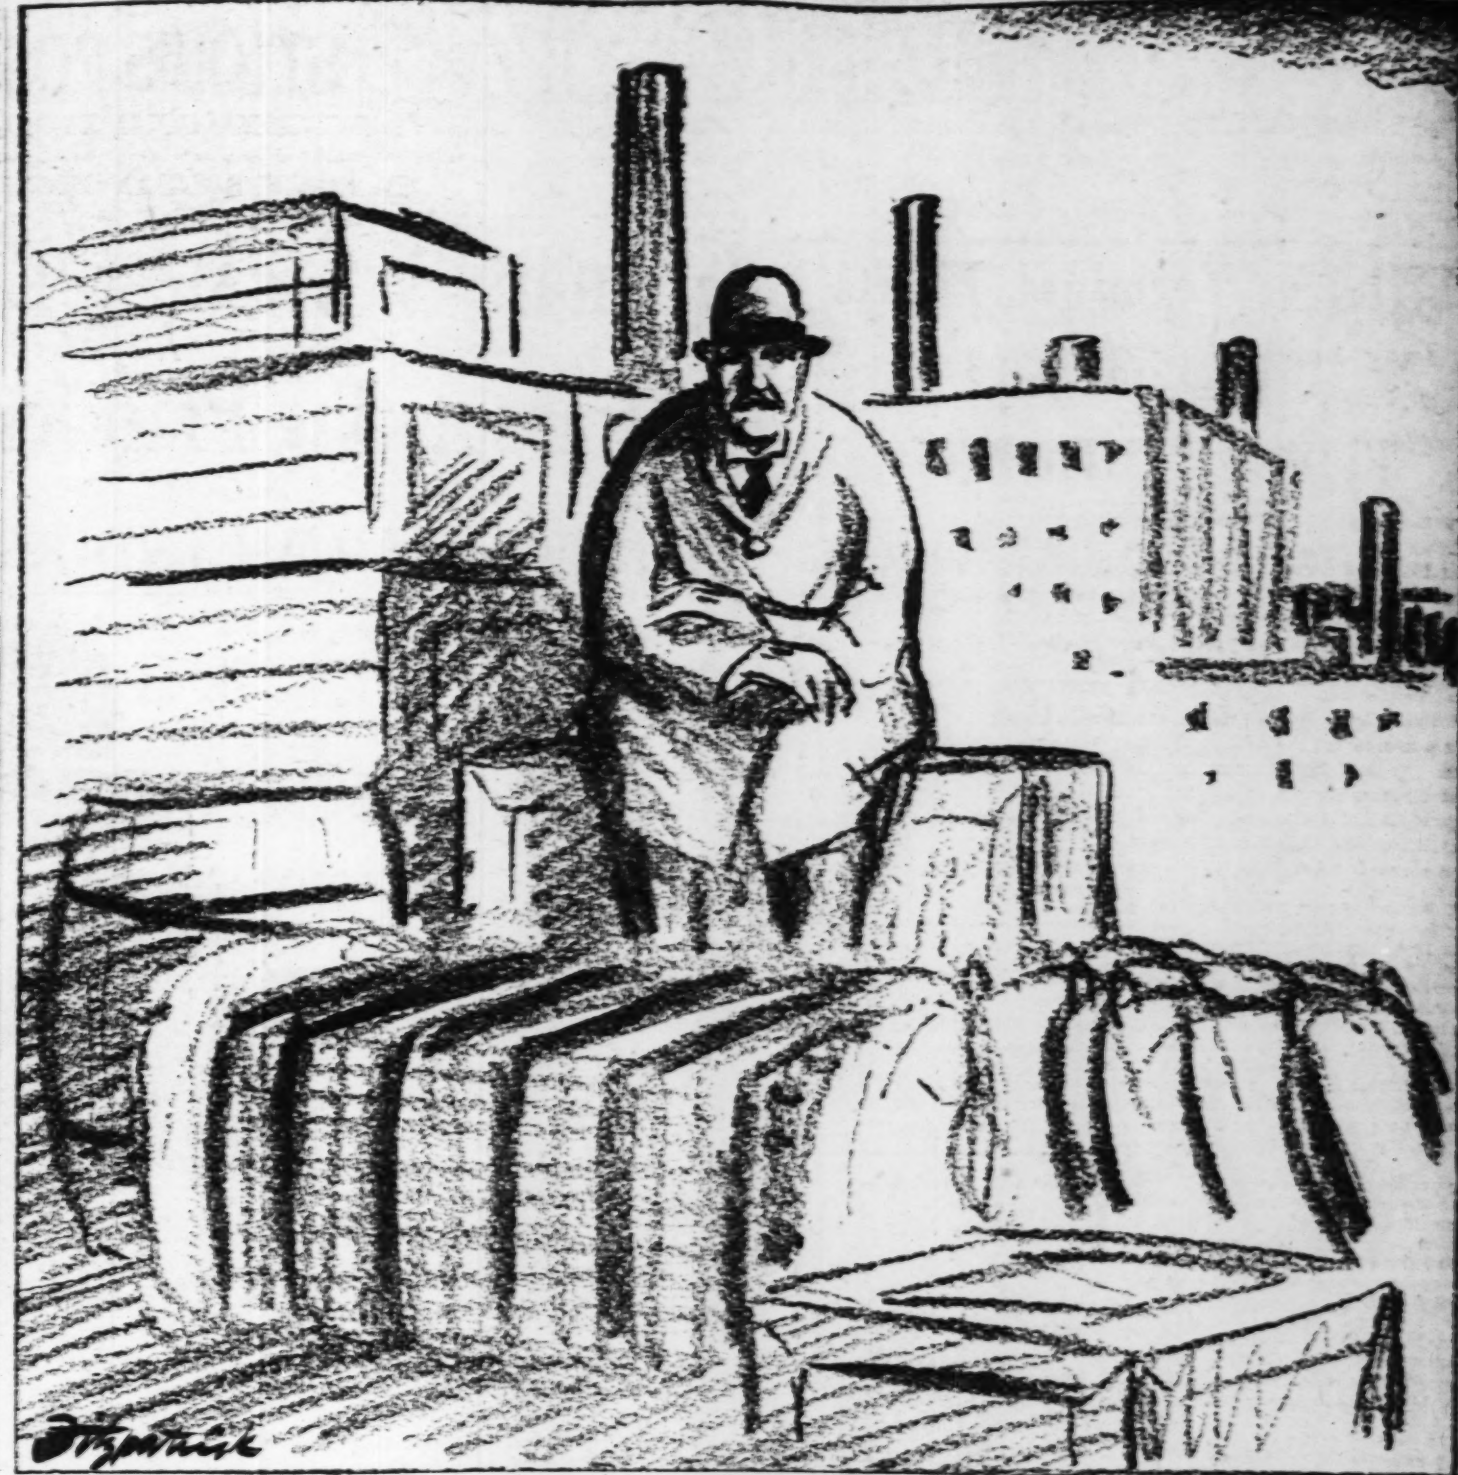

Awaiting that possibility, will it not be well to defer the question of coastwise tolls for the present?

SOCRATES AND HIS PUPILS.

SOCRATES: Do young men believe that the meeting of the League of Nations at Geneva is going to breed more war?

GLAUCON: Certainly not.

SOCRATES: How can you say that? Have we not been assured by any number of persons that this is what the certain result of such a league will be, and has not the country taken that view of it with unmistakable emphasis?

POLEMARCHUS: We beg to disagree with these people and with the country as well.

SOCRATES: That is, you don't believe any such thing.

POLEMARCHUS: No.

SOCRATES: Good! I don't believe it, either. I think we are witnessing the finest spectacle in all history—a world council for the purpose of averting war.

GLAUCON: I dare say. At any rate, this is true—that no such council ever has been held until now in all the centuries through which men have wondered how war might be prevented.

SOCRATES: Precisely. We know that it is from such a concert only that peace can come, and how we could have the consequence without first having the cause is pretty hard to make out.

POLEMARCHUS: It would take somebody like Senator Borah to tell us that.

SOCRATES: Well said, Polemarchus. I believe we are all willing to admit that the League of Nations possesses most of the weaknesses attributed to it by its enemies.

GLAUCON: It is not perfect.

SOCRATES: Was ever any new thing perfect? Thrasymachus? It has not often happened.

SOCRATES: No Thrasymachus—it has not often happened. As a matter of fact, we all know very well that the League of Nations will be born in travail; that it will have to grow through many painful experiences to the full stature of usefulness and discretion; that mistakes will be made, and that all the participants cannot for a long time be altogether sincere.

GLAUCON: The same things were true of domestic society, which has rid us of the necessity to arm and defend ourselves individually.

SOCRATES: Exactly. No doubt when the first domestic disarmament took place, everybody wanted to be the sheriff. We have outgrown that feeling in growing into the realization of domestic security.

POLEMARCHUS: What a pity we couldn't send people like Reading, Borah, Johnsons, Lodgins and the rest over to the net of the weaknesses attributed to it by its enemies.

SOCRATES: It is a pity. Indeed, it is a pity we cannot send the whole United States Senate over and have it listen to the debate. It would come home with a much altered idea of what the world needs and a much chastened disposition to continue the sort of debate it conducted on the subject for several months.

THRASYMACHUS: Why couldn't Senator Harding go over?

SOCRATES: Hush, Thrasymachus! You are becoming facetious. We have never said in this country what we think of the League of Nations. Naturally, enemies of the league say we have renounced it utterly; but we know that is not so. Could there have been a straight-out contest between those for and those against the league the league would have won overwhelmingly. Unfortunately, the war prevented that. Too many resentments upon a thousand scores came out of the war for dispassionate judgment upon a great issue like the League of Nations. We were not equal to it. However, since it was the war that made the league possible, we cannot have too many unkind remarks.

POLEMARCHUS: No. Let us figure only net results, as you have always taught us to do.

SOCRATES: Good, Polemarchus! Now let us think for a little, hoping that at Geneva also they sometimes fall thinking.

GEES.

Dear Hugh: Do I mistake, or must I understand that you infer (in yesterday evening's Post) We both can claim a common gene?

In your gray goose? I long have felt a kindred to the bird. For has it not an undeserved reputation for lack of mental weight?

Yet high, and straight, and safe it wends its way? Well, let it be!

For rather than, than to some gorgeous bird like parrot, peacock or the strutting Jay You like me (though these, more fair to see) Vivaciously suggesting how I got that way.

MART STERLING.

The people of Missouri did better with bond issues in the State than we did with the same thing in our municipal election. Maybe the State will have to drag us out of the past before we get done, even though we are a little ahead of it now.

The retail merchant never hears of wholesale price reductions as early as we do. He is a wee bit hard of hearing upon that score sometimes. The butcher especially hasn't heard any late news.

It looks as if secret diplomacy were going over the bumps at Geneva.

CLEO.

A. D. 120.
SLOW, sinuous convolutions.
A flash of yellow, crimson, blue.
Perpetual dizzy whirl and clashing
Of brass cymbals, staccato castanets.
Great yaws and ruddy sky o'er hanging
The conqueror's throne: all Hades
With its strange glamour quite out done
With such lustful pomp displayed.

Two bare feet thrust through the light's rays
Like peals of gleam of stars through summer's night.
Mournful eyes lit with the glow of chastity.
And a warm, firm breast free from conquest.
Slow, sinuous convolutions.
From the lush depths of the throne a snarl.
A frowning brow and leering lips.
Tight clenched fingers like lion's claws.
A distorted mind intent on the destruction
Of one of God's own master works.

Lights out, strange shadows
Guilped with the conflux of shade—
Clash of cymbals—soft beat of castanets.
Two, the hope of Cleo!

The MIRROR of PUBLIC OPINION

This column is designed to reproduce without bias the latest comment by the leading publicists, newspapers and periodicals on the questions of the day.

OUR COTTON INDUSTRY.

MELVIN T. COPELAND in Atlantic Monthly.
WHILE the Southern mills have utilized local supplies of labor, the Northern mills have employed many immigrants. Frequently, in a single mill in Massachusetts it is necessary, even today, to post signs in six or more languages in order to have them intelligible to the entire working force. Under present conditions, it appears that both the Northern and the Southern mills may soon be forced to seek supplies of labor from some new, untapped source. So far as foreign competition is concerned, the American manufacturers seem to be in a position to meet it successfully for most kinds of staple goods. The problem of the future, however, is to provide enough goods for the world's markets. While there are certain to be occasional depressions in this industry, as in others, during which foreign competition may be felt keenly, there appear to be enough new markets at home and abroad awaiting development to absorb readily all the cotton cloth that can be manufactured here or elsewhere. The task of the American cotton manufacturer is not to win existing markets away from foreign competitors, but to be prepared to supply a share of the new demand that will arise, not only in this country, but in other countries, such as India, China and Africa. To the men who are able to cope with these problems, the cotton industry affords unusual opportunities for sound, enduring progress.

UNJUST TO THE PRESIDENT.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.
SOMETHING very close to an insult to President Wilson is involved in the public appeal to the Republican party from the lips of Senator Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania, to do nothing in Congress looking to the revision of taxation until after March 4, on the theory that any bills passed would be vetoed by the President. This advice is based on no negligible source. Mr. Penrose is so much a power in the United States Senate that only a reckless prophet would predict the adoption of any policy without his consent.

Friends of Woodrow Wilson will resent, and are justified in resenting, the Penrose assumption. If in its last regular session this present Congress can do something to lessen public burdens in any way, it will have the President's sympathy, not his opposition. The demand of vast business interests for the repeal or radical amendment of the excess profits tax will be very hard to shut out to next spring. Penrose and those who stand with him have their work cut out for them. They are defying a very strong public sentiment which holds that party hatreds and rivalries ought to be subordinated to the general good.

SENATORIAL CLEANLINESS.

From the New York Herald.
THE announcement that the Senate has decreed the installation of luxurious Grace-Roman baths for the use of its members suggests that the majority of that body is determined to get off to a clean start in its new session. During the coming session, Senators will no longer have to take their baths in plebeian hotels. Theirs will be the exclusive privilege of taking their plunges of sponge or shower in the sacred precincts of the Capitol. Like the togged Romans, the togged American senators will bathe apart from the common herd. After the baths are installed and all are fully acquainted with its mysteries, what a relief it will be for those who are daily subjected to the grime of politics to take a cleansing plunge between times. Clean water baths on the side should give a refreshing innovation to the victims of mud baths on the floor of the Senate. If cleansing baths could be provided for the spirit as well as for the body, it would be a consummation still more devoutly to be wished. What a boon would be conferred upon the country if the senators' boots could be supplied with waters of a spiritual Jordan.

Events in the Social World

Interest Centers in Series of Announcements of Engagements, Important Among Them Being Betrothal of Miss Margaret Elinor Maxwell to Dr. Edwin Partridge Lehman—Miss Dorothy Walker Also to Wed.

SEVERAL betrothals of uncommon interest in the society world of St. Louis were made known last week. Yesterday Mrs. Harold Maxwell of 5038 Washington boulevard entertained with a luncheon at which announcement was made of the engagement of her daughter, Miss Margaret Elinor Maxwell, to Dr. Edwin Partridge Lehman.

Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

whose name, although it has the sound of jabberwocky and other such mythical creatures, means nothing more than "little chicken." Known colloquially as water hen, the purple gallinule is more common.

The anhinga, or American snake bird, is another of the water fowl that finds shelter in the reservation. Anhinga is about the size of a heron, but has a shorter bill. He is supposed to make the lives of copperhead moccasins and other snakes unhappy.

Of great importance in connection with the reservation is the protection of the snowy herons, or egret, from which the egret of commerce is obtained. During the past few years the high price of egret has brought death to millions of these birds, and in order to increase their numbers a carefully supervised heronery is maintained on Avery Island, a part of the Ward-Mellberry tract, where the birds are given full protection during the nesting season.

The egret, which grows on the lower parts of the bodies of the herons, reach their full beauty during the breeding season, and when a hunter kills one of the birds for the sake of some woman's vanity its ever-hungry young must starve to death. It is this fact that has threatened the species with extinction.

Robins on a Fatal Jag.
Another bird that is given protection on the reservation is the robin.
The robin has been given anything but a hospitable greeting upon his visits to the South each winter, and there are perceptibly fewer now than there were a decade ago, due chiefly to the ravages of market hunters, with what is known locally as "the $5 single-barrel" meaning a cheap, 12-gauge shotgun, with which scores of fat robin redbreasts may be killed in a few hours.

The robin's bad habit of getting on a red jaw when he arrives in the South makes him easy prey for small boys with slingshots or even with sticks, for the enticing red berries make him so drunk he isn't able to fly. He is far too handsome and attractive a bird to be wiped out, and the great reservation offers a chance for him to winter in peace—even to

BIG RECONSTRUCTION IDEA DESCRIBED BY GERMANY'S RICHEST MAN

Oil Light Beats Electric or Gas. Burns 94 Per Cent Air
A new oil lamp that gives an amazingly brilliant, soft white light, even better than gas or electricity, has been tested by the U. S. Government and 55 leading universities and found to be superior to 10 ordinary oil lamps. It burns without odor, smoke or noise—no pumping up, is simple, clean, safe. Burns 94% air and 6% common kerosene (coal-oil).

The inventor, A. N. Johnson, 609 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill., is offering to send a lamp on 10 days' FREE trial or even to give one FREE to the first user in each locality who will help him introduce it. Write him today for full particulars. Also ask him to explain how you can get the agency, and without experience or money, make $250 to $500 per month.

duction of their affiliated coal mines; and that they would have a tremendous incentive to do so, since instead of being kept on scant coal rations by a national coal commissioner, rationing according to mechanical, mathematical routine, they would enjoy the benefit of all the coal they wanted because they would get that 90 per cent of the total increased coal production which their affiliated mines could produce as a result of their financial and other co-operation. The Stinnes scheme automatically, as it were, supplies the two decisive factors necessary to a logical economic unit and then the Stinnes plan, as outlined above for south Germany, applied to each economic section, and you get some notion of the magnitude of Stinnes' idea of practical realization, as he calls it in contradistinction to the impracticable Socialism or Communism of the pink and red, theorists and visionaries.

"But I would go even further," Stinnes said. "I would give to all industrial concerns the possibility of pursuing this same course." Namely, of forming an intimate union with the coal mining concerns. Stinnes, in his own words, would let smaller industrial concerns link up intimately with those huge regional electric, gas and transportation trusts; he would have larger industrial works combine, such combinations in turn to hook up with their supplying coal mines; he would have the very largest industrial concerns link up intimately with those huge regional electric, gas and transportation trusts; he would have larger industrial works combine, such combinations in turn to hook up with their supplying coal mines; he would have the very largest industrial concerns go ahead independently and form their own liaison with the coal mines.

Three to Four Years Required.
"To carry out this plan would require a certain period of time, three or four years. One would achieve by it, that all the consumers who use up coal—and this consumption might consist in merely riding on the street cars or using electric light—would be united, and as such would take upon themselves the financial responsibility and would also be placed in a position actually to finance these joint enterprises. "But you would also create something else. You would create organisms which would be economically so strong that they could not be rooted up and carried away by a storm which perhaps in a very few months or weeks will sweep over us. Through these organisms the strength of our national economy can be maintained under all circumstances and enabled to 'carry on' no matter what else may happen at individual points in our state.

"The cure of Germany's economic problem is to abandon the system of centralization and to employ the system of individual economy in such a way that large groups of consumers take the whole coal economy in hand. Transportation, power, light, heat and water supply must be organized in the same way. No part of Germany must be left unsupplied; even the poorest parts of Germany must under all circumstances be supplied. To speak of my western home, Rhineland and Westphalia should unite to form one economic region; Berlin, with its surroundings, should be an economic region by itself. South Germany another, the Wasserkrante (including Hamburg and Bremen) another."

Then Stinnes gave this parting admonition to the members of the Economic Council debating the socialization of coal mines:

"If you want to keep on dividing centralistically (socialistically), you will keep it up until you will have nothing left to divide. Then the German Reich—that's the greatest misfortune that can hit us all—will go to pieces. The rich parts of the country will have something to eat and the poor won't. Disintegration will then be inevitable."

ADVERTISEMENT MAKES A FAMILY SUPPLY OF COUGH REMEDY

Really better than ready-made cough syrups and saves about $2. Easily and quickly prepared.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better. Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break severe coughs. To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. RIVER TERMINALS NEEDED TO MAKE TRAFFIC PROFITABLE minals for the interchange of freight between railroads and waterways, and even for the transference of cargo from river bank to barge, has received in the past but scant attention. Our inland waterways have been equipped with practically no modern, efficient plants with which to handle freight in and out of barges. At Mississippi River points it often costs, with present plants, as much to move freight from warehouses into barges as it costs to carry the same freight down the stream. Obviously the river traffic cannot become profitable until this limitation has been removed and freight enabled to move as cheaply over boatside as modern material-handling appliances will permit.

In this connection the Secretary of War has also been given broad powers for the creation of the needed facilities. He is authorized to have necessary waterway terminals designed and built, either as the property of the Federal Government or of states. He is authorized to confer with communities as to the proper location and design of such facilities. He is authorized to advance, under proper safeguards, funds which may be appropriated as loans to aid in the construction of terminals. Every possible provision, in other words, has been made to secure, at public expense, where necessary, the proper terminals for future waterway traffic.

Important Rate Work.
The equally important proposition of tariffs under which waterway services shall be maintained can be clarified by the inland and coastwise waterway service, and precedents established through the rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the present Government lines.

In fact, any duties toward waterway development which Congress has not specifically set forth in this legislation may be considered as included in the phrase "and to investigate any other matter which may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation." Surely these powers are sufficiently broad to permit the accomplishment of the stated purpose of this section of the act—to promote, encourage and develop water transportation, service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

Organization for Work.
When these important duties were first delegated to the Secretary of War, there naturally arose considerable discussion as to whether they should not be more appropriately carried out by the Department of Commerce or the Shipping Board, or even under the Interstate Commerce Commission. None of them are.

The latest merchant marine act gave to the Shipping Board certain duties as to waterway development which are similar to others under which the War Department is working. Besides all of these, the Interstate Commerce Commission has certain functions of a regulatory nature which bring it in touch with inland waterway operations.

GIRL - GIRL - GIRL

by BOOTH TARKINGTON..

WILLIAM SYLVANUS BAXTER JR., having completed his freshman year without any staggering failure to meet the terms of the authorities, at once set out for home, in the company of his friend, classmate and fellow townsman, Johnnie Watson. They had a pleasantly superior time on the train, upon which they found themselves the only members of the aristocracy; and, after permitting none of the other travelers to enter into any relations whatever with them, even of the remotest courtesy, they descended at their station leaving the sleeping car porter in a baffled mood behind them; his estimates had been low, but he had indeed counted upon more than 15 cents as a total for both.

The hour was late, and, fatigued with his thousand-mile journey, William retired to his thousand-dollar room, as soon as possible after quite cordially permitting his family to greet him. They said nothing of his altered appearance, and he wondered a little about that, as he fell asleep, for he felt so changed, himself, he took it for granted that the alterations were overpoweringly conspicuous. He was now anything but the unsophisticated, almost childlike boy who had gone out timidly into the world, the previous September. That boy, for whom he felt a faint contemptuous pity, was fortunately displaced forever; instead there returned a knowingly careless college man, fairly entitled to call himself a sophomore; and the experiences and special information, which had brought about this incomparable condition, were so elaborate they could not even be explained to home onlookers. The latter would just have to accept the change as one of the mysteries of the great world, so foreign, whence he had temporarily come back to them for their pleasure, they being so fond of him.

After breakfast, the next morning, he strolled down the street, smiling to himself at the poor ambitions of that provincial thoroughfare and remembering with more amusement than shame what he had once thought of it. Some of his thoughts he expressed to Johnnie Watson, after they had met and draped themselves upon the steps of the front porch at Johnnie's house.

"One of the funniest things about gettin' back to this ole place again," William said, "it's like this: You know what I think's the funniest thing about the whole business, Johnnie?"

"Well, no," Mr. Watson returned seriously.

"Oh! Then

I am to Understand

Is Sophy?"

"There's lots of funny things about it—it's a mighty queer feeling—but I haven't thought what the queerest thing of all about it. What do you think, Bill?"

"It's the way everything looks so little," his friend explained. "You take your yard here, for instance, Johnnie. I used to think it was a great big yard; and ours, too; and, well, I expect these people that always lived around here, like your family or mine, why, they prob'ly always will think these are great big yards."

"Well, I guess they prob'ly do, Bill," Johnnie agreed; and both laughed indulgently. "Yes, sir; the people that live in this town prob'ly think that way about a whole lot o' things."

"Well, it's natural thought," William said, so concentrating upon this perception that his brow became ridged with effort. "Why wouldn't they? Anybody that had never seen Central Park, or anything like that, for instance, why, they'd think this was a pretty good-sized yard, of course. Why, I used to myself, Johnnie."

"So'd I," Mr. Watson admitted, frankly. "I used to think Judge Taint's house across the street was prob'ly one of the biggest houses in any city in the country. Why, I used to think it was a regular palace, in those ole days! Well, sir, I was lookin' at it out o' my window when I got up, this morning. Bill, I had to laugh! It looked about as big as a pill box."

"So'd I," said William. "I used to think about that house just the same way you say you did, Johnnie, and I began to laugh as soon as I saw it when I was walkin' down the street here, a little while ago."

They meditated upon the metamorphosis in silence for a few moments; then William continued his thought. "You take any these people that live here in this town, Johnnie, what worries me is: What do they know? Well, all they know is just what goes on in this one little ole town. What's worse'n that, it's all they think about. They don't think about anything else, and they don't care about anything else."

"Well, the way I look at it is just this," said Johnnie. "What do they live for?"

"That's it, Johnnie. Why they want to go on livin' for beats me!"

"I'd just as soon be a mud turtle, myself," said Johnnie; "and then die."

"So'd I."

"I'd rather be one," Johnnie insisted. "For instance, you take the fellows we know that stay here all the time and don't go to college—or maybe go to some of these freshwater universities around here, well, you get to talkin' with one of 'em and you'll find out pretty soon that just about all he knows is girl."

"Girl-Girl-Girl"

Is another of the stories in the series of short fiction by the most popular authors of today. Three of these stories are printed each week in the Post-Dispatch, one starting on Sunday and being continued on Monday and Tuesday. Another starts on Wednesday and is continued through Thursday and Friday. On Saturdays a thrilling detective story by J. Storer Clouston is published.

The story that will follow "Girl-Girl-Girl" is "The Strange Case of Jeannine Lynde," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. It will begin in Wednesday's Post-Dispatch.

Among the writers represented in this great series are George Barr McCutcheon, Ellis Parker Butler, Holman F. Day, Richard Washburn Child, Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, George A. Chamberlain, E. Phillips Oppenheim, John Fleming Wilson, Fanny Hensell Lee, Frederick Cortis Bartlett, Henry C. Rowland, Lowell Otis Reese, Leonard Merrick, Elizabeth Jordan, Holworthy Hall, George Weston, Bruno Loeving, Maudie Radford Warren, Eleanor Halliwell Abbott, Virginia E. Roe, Arthur Train, Dana Gatlin, Lucian Carey, Mary Synon, Jeanette Lee, Bertha Ruck, Will Payne, Zana Gale, Edna Ferber, John Taintor Foote, Booth Tarkington, Ring Lardner and many others.

"Yep, that's the way they are," William assented. "Those fellows, that's all they got on their mind. You take Joe Bullitt, for instance; he told his father he'd rather get into business early in life, and never wanted to go to college, and his father took him in the bank and started him as a collector. Well, where'll he be four or five years from now? He'll just be some ole married man with a wife and a baby carriage to push around. That'd be a nice life, wouldn't it?"

The picture seemed to stimulate Mr. Watson in the direction of nausea. "It'd be just plumb horrible!" he said. "I certainly hope I'll never get to be some ole married man with children."

"I don't think it could happen to me, Johnnie; but if it did I'd bet my children wouldn't be like these other children you see people havin'. If I ever have any, you won't see 'em and you won't hear 'em, either, when you come to my house. I wouldn't even let 'em go in the front yard."

"You can't tell, Bill. Your wife would prob'ly raise 'em her own way and you wouldn't have much to say about it."

"Wouldn't it?" William demanded, severely. "She would not 'raise 'em her own way, and I'd have all the say about it."

"How'd you do it?"

"The first thing I'd say to my wife," William explained decisively, "I'd say, Look here now! I'd say, 'Who do you think furnishes the money for this family?' I'd say, 'Either you step right up here and toe the line when you hear me give my orders, I'd say, 'or else you don't get a cent for your household expenses—not a solitary cent! I guess that would give her about as much light on the subject as she'd need!"

Johnnie pushed back his straw hat and rubbed his hair reflectively. "Well, I dunno," he said. "I dunno whether that'd work or not. The way I'd talk to my wife'd be more on the lines of right and wrong, I guess. I'd say something like this, 'For instance, I'd say, Well, look here, now, you can reason, can't you? I'd say, 'You got a mind as well as anybody if you'd only use it, I'd say, 'What's the use of all this clamor and opposition and so on?' I'd say, And I'd tell her that kind of doings never did get anywhere with me. 'Just try to get down to the simple question of right and wrong,' I'd say. Then I'd walk over to the door and tell her just one last thing before I left: 'When you want me back, I'd say, 'why, you know where to send for me. But don't send for me till you've found out that right's right and wrong's wrong.' Then I'd go right on out and quit her."

William considered the drama thus prophesied, but his conclusions were doubtful. "It might do, but my way's better, Johnnie. Don't give 'em any rope at all."

"You're wrong, Bill. Give 'em enough and they'll hang themselves. Anyway, if I had a wife I wish that's just what she would do—go right on out and hang herself. And if you ever catch me with one, I hope you'll take a rope and hang me. It isn't just bein' married I object to so much;

When prices were stabilized at the mills we met the situation squarely by reducing the price of every rug in the house and taking our loss in one lump sum.

Our sale last week satisfied the people and they bought freely. You can buy this week at the same prices.

It's havin' a woman around all the time, where you can't get rid of her."

"I couldn't stand it two hours," said William. "Let alone month after month. Yet you take Joe Bullitt and these other fellows like that, it's just where they're headed for. Right now, all they know is just girl, girl, girl; and living in a town like this they don't do anything but get worse all the time. What do they know about athletics and good-fellowship?"

"I guess that's a fact, Bill!"

"Sure it is! All they got on their mind the year round, it's just girl, girl, girl!"

"Yes, sir," Johnnie again agreed, for, lacking a new topic, the conversation was well on the way to languishing. "Yes, sir, I guess that's so."

"Till the way it is, Johnnie."

Johnnie yawned. "Let's stroll on downtown, Bill, and get us a drink and see how the ole place looks these days."

"Get us a drink" was not meant alcoholically. Their intentions and tastes, genuinely otherwise, carried them to a once-familiar soda fountain, where, instead of the solid boy aloft presiding at the marble temple, a trim girl of 20 or so gave smiling attention to their wishes. Besides syrups, she had looks of several kinds, all fair; and the friends instantly became grave at sight of her. That is to say, their they did not will to set it upon their solemnity was not self-conscious; expressions. They were unaware of it—been unaware of themselves; an objective phenomenon engrossed them. To make matters clear by illustration, they showed such a change as might come upon a pair of art critics, who, talking casually of astronomy or prohibition, should happen unexpectedly into a room containing a new-found Velasquez. "Well, what'll it be?" the beautiful girl naturally inquired.

"Chock ice cream soda," said Johnnie in a low voice.

GRAY TO HEAD OPERA TROUPE AT PERSHING

Delmar Boulevard Theater Will Open With Musical Stock Company Christmas.

Beginning Christmas day, the Pershing Theater, on Delmar west of Hamilton, will abandon vaudeville and motion pictures. It is announced, and revert to the function it discharged when it was called the Park Theater, that of housing a musical comedy stock company. This will be headed by Roger Gray, formerly leading comedian of the Park Opera Co., which disbanded several years ago. Gray is now in this city making plans for the personnel of the troupe, which, he promises, will include several singers of repute on Broadway. Local singers are also to be engaged.

It is stated that the company will consist of approximately 40 persons, including a chorus of 30. Gray will act as stage manager. The type of entertainment to be offered is shown by the announcement that the works already booked include "Miss Springtime," "The Riviera Girl," "La La Lucille," "Sometime," "Have a Heart," "Love o' Mike," "You're in Love," "Oh! Boy," "Going Up," "The Lilac Domino" and "Oh! My Dear."

The standard admission price will be 35 cents, with two matinees at lower prices each week. The Pershing is operated by the Famous Players-Miscou Corporation, owners of a chain of other playhouses.

Gray played here 102 weeks as a member of the Park Opera Co. His latest engagement was as leading comedian in the New York company of "The Royal Vagabond."

GIRL—GIRL—GIRL

freely sprinkled the spicy powder of a grated nutmeg. Apparently, her imagination gave out at this point, as she added nothing more; but in reality no such mental exhaustion could be charged upon her; she was not inventing the dish, as she went along, but, on the contrary, following a routine formula well-known to William and his companion. It was perfect, as done, though she was modest enough to say: "I guess that's right, isn't it?"

"Why, sure!" William responded, warmly; and when Johnnie also was provided with what he had asked for, the two went to a little table, sat, ate slowly and, with continued gravity, observed the lovely soda girl, as she served other customers. It may be said they watched her almost unabatedly, yet without any consultation between them. Their hands, unaided by their eyes, rhythmically conveyed the slow spoons to their lips without noticeable mishap; their grins passed straight, always, to the fountain.

Nothing in their unflinching, attentive regard bothered the soda girl; she was busy with shapely movements; her kind smile was for everyone; she seemed unaware of all affairs beyond the sodas and sundae; these were the only paths to her consciousness. But no such analysis was William's or Johnnie's; they only sat and looked, and kept on looking.

There is a strange thing about looking at a really pretty girl—the longer the looker looks the prettier she grows. If it were not for this, more plays would fail; therefore dramatists might well include some proficiency herein with what used to be called their technique. By the time William was ready for his second popcorn sundae and Johnnie for his second chocolate ice cream soda, the soda girl was four or five times as beautiful as she had been when they came into the store.

They approached the marble-like counter and Johnnie said: "Two more, please."

"It's funny about those Rumney Jiggers," William observed, seeming to address his friend and not the soda girl, who had immediately begun the tasks they assigned her. You see could not fail to hear. "You'd think when a new thing comes out in New York like that it'd spread all over the country by this time."

"Well, I don't know," Johnnie said, with slow judiciousness, as if the idea set forth might dazzle the unthinking into immediate acceptance of it, whereas a scrutiny by calmer minds would probably reveal flaws. "I don't know about that at all, Silly Bill."

William was not pleased by this too audible introduction of his unfortunate nickname. He flushed a little and was forced to stifle an explanation that he felt should be made immediately. It was impossible to say, "it's only on account of my name's being Sylvanus and William," because Johnnie knew that, of course, and William was ostensibly talking to him and not to the soda girl. Besides, Johnnie was going on with his own remarks.

"I don't know about that at all, Silly Bill," he repeated—indeed, needlessly. "If you notice the way things like that work out, why, it takes about a year for what's new in New York to work out to this old burg. For instance, look at hats. Right now you can see they're still wearing broad brims out here."

A warmish antipathy for his friend had displaced the usual feeling of fellowship in William's breast. Besides calling him "Silly Bill," Johnnie was now claiming New York for himself. William was unable to respond more cordially than by muttering, "Well, I guess they got a right to."

"Popcorn sundae and chock ice cream," said the soda girl, placing these before them with her smile. William took note that she put the soda first, and her doing so seemed

DRUGGIST'S WIFE DISCHARGED IN ALICE MARTIN CASE

Mrs. Mollie Maserang, wife of Joseph Maserang, a druggist at Taylor street and Olive street, was discharged yesterday by Judge Miller of the Court of Criminal Correction, in a case in which she was alleged to have uttered a criminal slander upon Miss Alice Martin, a dancing teacher. Judge Miller heard the evidence Tuesday, and took the case under advisement.

He based the decision upon his finding that, according to the chief prosecuting witness, Mrs. H. R. Wells, 4548 Westminster place, the alleged slander, "If it was said at all," was in the form, not of an assertion, but of hearsay report or else interrogation, beginning either "I hear," or "Have you heard?" or "Did you know?" Under the rules of criminal law, the Court held, it would be necessary to prove that Mrs. Maserang maliciously and falsely uttered the alleged slander.

"It appears from all the evidence," concluded Judge Miller, "that Miss Martin has an excellent reputation, and that it has been a great injustice to her to have tales tattled in the community against her fair name."

To Look Young Quickly
For Special Occasion

How often have you fussed and puttered with your face on the eve of some important social event when you wanted to look your prettiest, and try what you would you just couldn't get the desired result? Next time your face becomes unruly, exhibiting a rawness and saggy appearance, and crisscrossed with fine lines, here's something that will quickly transform it into one of youthful freshness.

Just get an ounce of powdered saxolite at your druggist's, mix this with about a half pint of witch hazel, and bathe your face in the solution for two or three minutes. Immediately after you feel a firming up of the skin and underlying tissue, which naturally iron out the little wrinkles, worry marks and flabbiness. The contour and general appearance of your face are so improved, you will be glad you heard of this simple and harmless method.

GRAND-LEADER

Announce Reductions

ON the following lines of merchandise, which will assure purchasers of securing the best values in home furnishings that are available. Selections may be made from our complete and unsurpassed stocks of carefully selected goods.

Furniture

Our entire stock of Furniture has been subjected to a complete revision of prices. We have endeavored to mark down every article to a point where the value will equal or surpass any that is being offered. If you are familiar with our Furniture stock, and with the prices that have prevailed, you will appreciate what tremendous concessions are being made.

We urge those who contemplate buying Furniture to investigate the merits of the values we are presenting.

These price revisions have been made in anticipation of a break in the Furniture market, although there is none forecasted because the Furniture situation is peculiar in that there is no surplus available, the mills having been closed down. The Grand Rapids and Jamestown markets are practically closed. This is a peculiar condition, with every advantage on the side of the consumer.

(Seventh Floor.)

Domestic Rugs

The recent wholesale prices established at the auction sale of Alexander Smith & Sons have been made the basis of our selling prices throughout our entire stock. Every Rug, as well as every yard of carpet, has been marked down. Customers may buy now to advantage.

(Ninth Floor.)

Oriental Rugs

The major portion of our stock of magnificent Oriental Rugs, which were bought and selected by our own representative, who went to the Orient for that purpose, is being offered at material price reductions.

Oriental Rugs, at the prices now quoted, are a splendid investment; and there is the added advantage of making a selection from a stock that is unusually attractive, and replete with gems from the looms of the Orient.

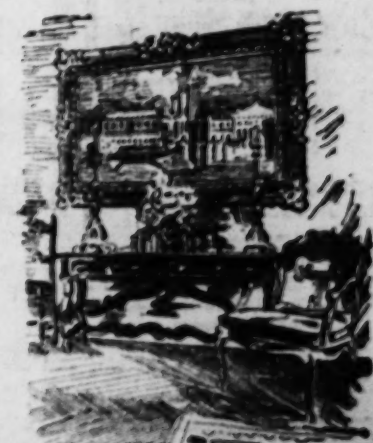

(Ninth Floor.)

Frames-Pictures

With the beginning of the Holiday Season and its attendant demand for Pictures, Frames, etc., we are anticipating the change of market conditions in these lines by offering our entire stock, with but one reservation, at a discount of 20%.

Wallace Nutting Pictures alone are excepted, as they are standard in price. All other Pictures, Frames, Mirrors, everything in this section, will be 20% less than the marked price.

This discount will be maintained until new selling tickets can replace the old ones. The reductions will be permanent.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SENDS A MESSAGE TO BRAZILIANS

Dr. Sampaio, Commercial Attache, Will Carry Greetings to His Countrymen.

Dr. Sampaio, Brazilian commercial attache to the United States, formerly stationed in St. Louis, yesterday notified the Chamber of Commerce that he was to accompany Secretary of State Coby to Brazil and return and would be willing to convey any message commercial organizations in St. Louis had to convey to the Brazilian people.

President Carter of the Chamber of Commerce made public the following telegram designed to strengthen the cordial relations already existing between business men of both countries:

"Learning that you are to visit your native country, we beg you to say to your people, and especially to all commercial organizations with whom you may come in contact, that the business men of St. Louis and the Mississippi Valley desire to express to them through you their feeling of cordial friendship, both social and commercial."

"It is their desire to see the bonds of friendship and commerce between our two great republics strengthened in every possible way in the years immediately ahead. St. Louis today is a seaport, and our wonderful river is already beginning to come into its own, carrying to our gateway at New Orleans our various products destined for South American ports. "We want to see the traffic between Brazil and the Mississippi Valley quadrupled, and we want every merchant and manufacturer in Brazil and in our own country to feel that it is in their own best interests to trade with each other to the fullest extent, with full confidence in each other. We want your people to visit St. Louis and to bring their sons with them."

"There are now several hundred young men in St. Louis schools and universities from South American countries, which is most gratifying to us. Pray present to our honorable President and the members of his Cabinet renewed assurances of our regard and esteem."

Free Exhibit of Douglas Painting. The painting depicting the first Christian martyr, by William Davis Douglas, member of the Royal Institute of Fine Arts of Naples, Italy, will be on exhibition daily and evenings commencing today, free, until further notice, to give St. Louis an opportunity of viewing it prior to its departure for Europe, where it is to be exhibited in order to raise money for the benefit of the needy orphans of the war. The exhibition is at 1210 North Grand avenue.

Glass of Salts Cleans Kidneys

If your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you, drink lots of water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will get fine. The famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acid so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

PROGRAM FOR FIRST FALL FESTIVAL OF LEGION ANNOUNCED

Affair Will Open in Coliseum Dec. 7 and Continue for the Remainder of That Week.

A special program in recognition of American mothers who gave sons to the American Army has been arranged by the Executive Committee of the American Legion as a feature of the first annual fall festival of the legion, entitled the "Battle of Paris," to be held in the Coliseum Dec. 7 to 12, inclusive.

Friday night, Dec. 10, has been designated as Mothers' night, and Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink, grand opera prima donna, who had three sons serving simultaneously under the American, French and German flags, in the late war, will participate in the program with some of her best songs. Every soldier, sailor and marine in St. Louis will be expected to escort his mother to the festival for this occasion.

Gen. Wood on Program. Major-General Leonard Wood and Col. F. W. Galbraith Jr., national commander of the American Legion, are programmed to take part in the opening night's exercises, Tuesday, Dec. 7, which will be known as American Legion night. The special features will be post colors, military drills and exhibitions.

Wednesday will be Red Cross night, and Mrs. Frank V. Hammar, president of St. Louis chapter, has announced a number of features portraying the humanitarian work of that organization. Sisters' night, Thursday, will feature St. Louis society. Miss Anne Morgan has been invited to attend, and former service men will be expected to bring sweethearts or sisters.

Saturday night the "sports" will have their inning. Boxing and wrestling will be featured, including fighters and wrestlers from Camp Pike, Ark., and Jefferson Barracks, who will vie for the championship of these two camps.

A special musical program will be given Sunday afternoon, the closing day, and among the speakers will be the Rev. Orville Anderson Petty, "fighting chaplain of the Tankeke Division," at present pastor of Plymouth Church, New Haven, Conn. H. S. Townsend, chairman of the Festival Committee, said Dr. Petty was one of the most distinguished men of the war. He was promoted from Lieutenant to Captain and to Major, and was thrice decorated for gallantry by France and Belgium. The Rev. Father Thomas D. Kennedy, former chaplain of the 138th (St. Louis) Infantry, and the Rev. John W. Inzer of Alabama, former chaplain, also will take part in the closing exercises.

To Issue Daily Paper. The interior of the Coliseum will be transformed into a veritable garden of artificial flowers. Women of the auxiliaries have already made 50,000 poppies and are now at work on apple blossoms. As an advance reminder of the festival, poppies will be distributed free in the shopping district downtown at noon each day this week.

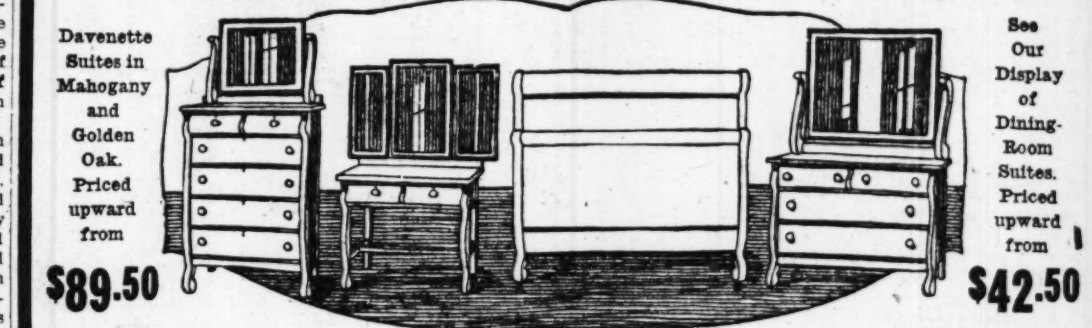

"The Legionaire," a 12-page, 6-column paper will be issued daily during the festival. In addition to the multiplicity of other entertainment features, there will be six brass bands and "jazz" orchestras to furnish music for dancing. The proceeds will be used to promote welfare work, particularly as to employment, among worthy members of the American Legion in St. Louis and to create a nucleus for a legion building in this city.

Ask Your Doctor Why you feel "off color"

He knows the reason—the underlying cause. And will tell you, most likely, that what you need is a good physic.

He knows, too, that the poison germs in your system multiply by minutes when waste matter remains in the intestines. They imperil your health. They invite sickness and disease.

The waste must be removed without loss of time. A day—even half a day—is too long. That is why advanced medicine warns against old-fashioned, slow-acting cathartics. These cathartics allow time for the waste to spread disease.

Thousands of well-informed physicians now recommend a harmless mineral water as the safe laxative to take. They prescribe it for their patients, young and old, because its action is sure—the results prompt and complete. This water is known as Pluto.

The effectiveness of Pluto Water is due to the minerals it contains. They soften the waste accumulation. The water helps to flush it gently away. The action is pleasant and gentle—entirely free from the griping effects of old-fashioned cathartics.

Millions have found health Millions of people have now found health at this source. Those smiling faces you see—those ruddy cheeks and clear, healthy complexions—need no longer be the cause of envy. You, too, can keep your health at par.

See your druggist today. Ask for a bottle of Pluto Water. Use it at home—first thing in the morning or before meals. Know its pleasant, gentle action. Convince yourself of its prompt, complete results. Learn how it restores normal, healthy activity. Protect your health—feel fine again!

Thousands take Pluto Water even though the bowels move with apparent regularity. They know the health value of a periodic cleansing.

Pluto Water is the reliable home laxative. Physicians everywhere recommend it and suggest that it be kept always handy. It is equally effective for children and grown-ups. As a laxative take 1/4 tumbler of Pluto; as a cathartic, 1/2 tumbler; as a purgative, 3/4 tumbler—add hot or cold water to fill glass. Bottled at French Lick Springs, Indiana.

The danger of constipation Constipation brings on colds, headaches, influenza, rheumatism, indigestion, pneumonia and most human ills. Your physician will tell you the importance of removing the waste matter from your system at once. He will tell you the dangers in slow-acting, old-fashioned, over-night cathartics.

EASY MONEY FAILS TO BOOST PRICES ON STOCK MARKET

Commodity Liquidation Proceeds—New Low Price Records on Many Classes of Goods.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted weekly financial review, says:

"The week's stock market started with a strong general rally after the previous week's demoralization, gains of 1 to 2 points being common. On Tuesday irregularity developed, and on the days before and after the holiday, this irregularity continued with a tendency to decline on small trading. By Saturday a large part of Monday's gains had been lost, and some issues were actually lower. The week started with vigorous short covering and petered out on profit-taking and with indications of a certain amount of bear experimenting. The dubious outlook clearly continued to be a stronger factor than easy money."

"Contraction of credit and reduction of note circulation, as shown by the last week-end bank statements, has indicated progress toward easier money. Accordingly, it was not altogether surprising that call money on the stock exchange, which opened Monday morning at 7 per cent, should end the day at 5. This rate proved too low for the rest of the week, and the same time the cash price of No. 1 spring wheat was $1.71, a drop of $1.19 in the last year and 68 cents in the last month. Corn, which has fallen in price in proportion to wheat, showed slightly more rallying power, but the ultimate results of farmers' efforts to postpone an early sale of their corn to hogs is foreshadowed by a sharp break in the price of the latter to the lowest price in four years. Another sharp break in cotton brought the December price to 13.35 cents a pound, or a loss since the previous Saturday of 3 cents."

"The weakness in the Liverpool market reinforcing a similar condition on our own side. Steel prices, too, declined, and the most significant fact was the announcement on Friday that Jones & Laughlin, the largest of the independents, had cut prices of certain finished steel production to the United States Steel Corporation level. The reductions, which are on the lines making up the largest tonnage of finished products, are from the recent lowest price of $1 a hundred weight to $2.15 on bars, $2.15 on structural shapes, and $2.15 on plates. Up to the present the independents have been hesitating to reduce prices for fear of stimulating cancellations without increasing orders. The stage at which the plunge must be taken now evidently has been reached."

"Steel Prices Cut. —Iron ore this week reported independent companies operating at from 50 to 75 per cent capacity, with a number of the smaller mills shut down. The question now seems to be as to whether the independents can, in a declining market, do business for long at the Steel Corporation's scale or whether they must ultimately go below it. The latter seems the more likely outcome. The week has emphasized the severity of the commodity liquidation in England, and the attending forced liquidation in securities. Considerable financial assistance has had to be given embarrassed business, and as is usual in such cases, about 100 credit rumors have been circulated. Financial London has a good understanding of these matters, however, and it is interesting to see clear-headed British observers expressing their realization of the fact that these difficulties and pains of liquidation are indispensable to the recovery of a sound basis of trade."

"The situation on the two sides of the Atlantic are remarkably alike and we may find consolation and encouragement in their philosophical view of the situation. We are also recovering, in the present world-wide liquidation, a fresh demonstration of how our own business and values are inextricably bound up with those of the rest of the world."

MORE OPTIMISTIC VIEW OF FUTURE HELD IN LONDON

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Although outwardly pessimism is the prevailing note in stocks and trade, there is an underlying feeling that developments are shaping towards sounder conditions, in which connection the greater ease of your monetary situation excites particular attention. Given further declines in commodity prices, both wholesale and retail, and the absence of a reduction in the rate of bank rates in the early part of the year is possible. The difficulty is, however, that any talk of cheap money is immediately counteracted by speculation which is utterly inconsistent with the genuine world-wide demand for capital."

Views of Industry. —There is great interest in the recent interview between the representatives of Government and industry. The Government is now consulting with bankers and traders, but it is feared that schemes are more likely to take the form of ingenious

ANONYMOUS DONOR GIVES $85,000 TO ST. LOUIS U. FUND

The Rev. Father William F. Robison Says Contributor Wishes Name Withheld Until After His Death.

A donor who has requested that his identity be concealed, has given $85,000 to the $2,000,000 centennial endowment fund of St. Louis University, of which $55,000 is in Liberty Bonds which will go to the fund upon his death.

The identity of the donor has not even been disclosed to directors of the fund, who have charge of raising the fund, his identity being known only to the Rev. Father William F. Robison, president of the university, who said "Donator Ignominia" by which the man wishes to be known, desires to withhold his name until after his death.

At a recent meeting of the Founders' Committee, which has to do with gifts in excess of $10,000, Father Robison announced that a "man" who had recently given the university $20,000, had also subscribed $10,000 to the Founders' Fund, and had put aside the $55,000 in Liberty Bonds to be transferred to the fund later on.

Father Robison said the university's anonymous friend was wealthy and had given liberally to other causes for the public good, and in recent years had decided to dispose of the greater part of his fortune while living, after having provided liberally for his family.

St. Louis University now has a total enrollment of 2,118 students, representing 20 states. There is a faculty of 234, the majority of whom are lay professors, the pay of these instructors, together with needed equipment, being advanced as the chief reason for the endowment that is being sought.

NORMAN ANGELL POINTS OUT
WHY AMERICA CANNOT EVADE CONCERN IN OUTSIDE WORLD

Author of "The Great Illusion" Discusses Unemployment and Trade Decline With U. S. Outside the League.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27. (His best known book, "The Great Illusion," warns against this non-sense on the first page), but that it would prove impossible by war, however victorious, to obtain prosperity and safety. He was the first to suggest that an indemnity commensurate with the cost of modern war would involve the re-establishment of the enemy's foreign trade and other conditions to which the victor would be extremely unlikely to consent; and that the economic independence of nations, revealed particularly through the operations of the credit system, had gone far to render military power economically futile.

The English author arrived in America last week, after an absence of two years during which he has been an active member of the Advisory Committee of the British Labor Party on Foreign Affairs, and has served with J. M. Keynes, J. A. Hobson and Sir George Paish on the Economic Committee of the Fight the Famine Council. He is a parliamentary candidate of the Labor party.

"What ought America to do about a League of Nations?" he was asked. "What do you think it is to her self advantage to do, and what do you think she ought to do?"

"It is not for a European to say what America should do about a League of Nations," he replied. "Moreover, America's entrance into the league is a less important fact than her purpose and intention in entering it. She might enter it as certain European states have entered, and allow it to remain a dead letter. She might enter it and, without any violation of the letter of her contract, and without intending to do so, intensify by her general attitude the old competition for irresponsible power which it was the object of the league to bring to an end. There is a fundamental divergence of interest between England and France noticeable at this time. England's very life—the actual life of fifteen millions of her people—depends upon the steady production of food by foreigners. France has no such dependence upon the outside world. Certain forces in the French governing order seem to be pushing along a road which threatens the economic destruction of Europe and tends toward rebuilding the old military system."

"Europe owes America $10,000,000,000. Cotton growers and wool producers in America cannot sell their goods because half the world is utterly disorganized economically. The present unemployment here obviously will get worse, and America will probably lose her money unless European economic life can be established."

"But I have been wondering what would happen if, at a time when Anglo-American relations had become a bit heated, the police or soldiery in Ireland were to kill a couple of wealthy Americans taking part in the Irish rebellion. The bitterness would not be likely to lead to war, but it might lead to America's aligning herself with the wrong forces in Europe."

Never Get the Bread. "Post-war conditions over half the world entirely vindicate certain theories of mine that have been much derided. I once attacked the principle that nations fight for bread. They may think so and fight, but they never get bread that way. You cannot by conquest take property as a boy takes an apple. If military power enables you to 'take' the wealth of the vanquished, why is France talking about bankruptcy? She has absolute power over what was the greatest industrial power in Europe. France cannot even get sufficient coal for her school rooms, much less an indemnity in order to make her budget balance."

"England has disposed of her greatest trade rival; and never was England's position so precarious. The British sovereign that used to be the world standard of stability is now a bit of paper that can only be cashed at a heavy discount. Italy is another victor. Why does she not go in and help herself to Austria's wealth? The truth is, of course, that ever vast areas in Europe society is decomposing before our eyes, and all our military power is impotent to arrest the decomposition. Our military triumph cannot even achieve the elementary social task of getting sufficient coal from the earth to keep life—which must be in our day industrial life—going."

How America Is Affected.

"And if you want to know how those theories affect America, take your morning paper, turn first to the price list of the foreign exchanges, then to the prices of cotton and wool, and then to the figures of unemployment in a whole range of manufacturing industries. It is your turn to be affected by the economic rot, or creeping paralysis, which has so far not reached you in any visible degree. As late as six months ago trade was booming in England. British manufacturers declined to be interested in the Continental collapse or the famine or the debauchery of the currencies. They are more interested now."

"You speak of developing foreign trade as a relief to your unemployment, building up a mercantile marine, preventing the bitter social unrest and conflict that have devastated so much of Europe, and which have been born also so largely of unemployment and wage conflicts. But how can you develop a big foreign trade with a world whose paper money is so largely worthless? One need not speak of the countries where the unit normally worth 50 cents is now worth less than 1 cent. But how can a country like France buy American goods when she has to give 15 or 17 instead of 5 francs for every dollar article?

"Oh, yes! America can be self-supporting, self-sufficing, isolated—in theory. In practice you are quite unable to evade concern in the outside world. In the last 20 years or so you have sent your armies round the world. The self-contained and 'isolated' America has been compelled to intervene in the affairs of Spain—to fight that country and to take over and subdue great Eurasian populations thousands of miles from your shores; in the affairs of Great Britain over the Venezuelan and 20 other subsequent matters; in Honolulu, in Haiti, in Mexico, in Central America. Your soldiers have just fought not only in France against Germany, but in Siberia; they are still in occupation of part of Europe; you seem to be heading for a bitter conflict with Japan over the California business, and perhaps with England over the Irish business; your Mexican policy and matters like the Panama tolls may involve indefinite complications. from their families and turned the universe upside down.

Wealth of America.

America is of course, so wealthy that she could face with relative calmness the large armaments and military preparation which intense nationalism and isolation would involve. But one may doubt whether the American business world has sufficiently faced the fact that intensified military preparation—as the war proved—means state Socialism. War in our day means the mobilization not merely of men, but of the whole industry of the country. War is mainly a matter of material—munitions; and if the country is to be placed on a war footing the Government must progressively increase its hold over the industrial organization. A war in Mexico involving big movements of troops for several years would pretty certainly involve a return of the railroads to Government control. Militarization means socialization. But the socialization is not likely to be limited to the tasks of war, nor to be permanently of the kind that the military nationalist desires.

About Entering the League.

You asked me what America ought to do about a League of Nations. The important question is whether America would favor the restoration of Central Europe and of Russia, and the rather drastic measures necessary for that—measures involving international arrangements about credit and about the disarmament of small states—or whether she would be in favor of subordinating economic recovery to the political purposes of some of the allies. In other words, what is going to be America's policy when she has entered the league? To what end will she attempt to use the league in the German and Russian issues, for example, that would certainly arise? Until we have some idea as to how that question would be answered, it is not possible to answer the other, as to what America should do about entering the league or a league.

He was interrupted by two questions. The first: "In the event of a war with Mexico, do you think it would be likely to last 'several years'?" The second: "Do you think socialization always follows militarization? It seems that here in America the Government has handed back the railroads very peacefully, and we seem about as far from socialization as ever."

To the first question he replied: "It took England three years and half a million men to overcome an army of 10,000 Boers. Do a sum in arithmetic on this basis and calculate how long it would take to overcome 12,000,000 Mexicans, making all allowances for the proximity of the United States to Mexico."

"As to the socialization that follows war, the change may not be so evident in America. You were not subject to the tendency so long as we in Europe. But the war measures in England, for instance, have transformed the whole social and industrial outlook. With all our efforts to get rid of this legacy of five years of war, state socialism in great areas of activity remains as a permanent feature."

These new social tendencies—the new powers over industrial activities and private property assumed by the war state—are likely to be affected even in America by the example of Europe. And the legacy of war is drastic social readjustment—where it is not chaos. Paper money and the consequent debasement of the currency means, even in a country like France, the consecration of something like a two-thirds part of the small accumulated fortunes. Those holding bonds have seen their property depreciate at least by that amount. This confiscation is not the work of Bolsheviks, but of very bourgeois Governments. It is one of the many forms of war socialization.

BIG BROTHERS TO OPEN CAMPAIGN TOMORROW

$25,000 Fund to Be Raised to Carry on Work Among Boys in 1921.

The Big Brother Organization of St. Louis will open a campaign tomorrow to acquaint the general public with the scope of its work, and to gain interest in its effort to give boys a chance to become respected, self-supporting citizens instead of drifting in the never-do-well, or criminal class.

Preventive measures for the young boys have been proven by the organization to be of tremendous value. Since 1916, when the Big Brother Organization was formed, 2681 boys have been aided, of whom $1 per cent were deserving boys of whom no delinquency had been reported, the remaining 19 per cent having been before the Juvenile Court, where a representative of the Big Brothers is present at every session. Ninety-seven per cent of the entire number of boys in this period have had good records since they have come under the supervision of the Big Brothers.

The Big Brother Organization now has 282 boys on the rolls, for whom there are 191 Big Brothers. There are 98 cases being cared for by the office of the organization, awaiting the selection of Big Brothers of like religious faith of the boys, as the invariable rule is followed of adhering to the church affiliations of the families of the boys. The organization is strictly nonsectarian.

Giving the boy a chance to become a useful, prosperous citizen, an asset to himself and the community, is the object of the Big Brother Organization, and each individual member who takes charge of a boy puts himself in the position of a friend eager to develop the best in the boy, to give him opportunity to live a clean, wholesome life, and to help him solve his problems. Giving a boy the right chance pays big dividends in citizenship, the Big Brothers believe, and they work to make the underprivileged boys of the city an asset instead of a liability to the community. No money is expended by men who act as Big Brothers, it is instead a matter of interest and personal watchfulness over the welfare of the boys that is the prime requisite.

Addresses are to be made this week before clubs and civic organizations in support of the campaign and a subscription fund of $25,000 is to be raised to further the work and carry on the budget for 1921.

FOIBLES OF '70S SEEN IN 'NOT SO LONG AGO'

Charming Comedy Tonight at Shubert; "William Rock's Revue" at American.

A charming and well constructed comedy is "Not So Long Ago," which begins a week's visit tonight at the Shubert-Jefferson, with winsome Eva Le Gallienne, daughter of the poet, Richard Le Gallienne, sharing first place in the cast with Sidney Blackmer. Another of the new musical show serials, "William Rock's Revue of 1920," also opens tonight at the American, among those in the company of entertainers being Jas. J. Corbett, Billy B. Van and William Rock.

A new and promising playwright, Arthur Richman, is the author of "Not So Long Ago," the scene of which is placed in the New York of the 'seventies—when horse wars ran up and down the avenues, when people complained of the high cost of living because eggs were 25 cents a dozen and shoes $3 a pair, when fashionable maidens wore bustles and cultivated the "Grecian bend," and when stationary bathtubs were coming into favor, although conservative folk still believed it should be possible to fold up and conceal such immoral appurtenances.

The heroine, played by Miss Le Gallienne, is a comely young seamstress, employed in making over dresses for the ladies of the wealthy Ballard family—who are not, after all, as wealthy as they might be. Her name is Elsie Dover, and she is afflicted with a power to imagine romances so plausible that she believes them herself.

Heroine Tells Many Fibs.

Her gifts, during the play, are chiefly employed in inventing love passages between herself and Billy Ballard, the melancholy young heir of the family—although he has never spoken to her and scarcely knows she exists. After numerous diverting scenes, the heroine finally has the satisfaction of seeing her dreams become realities.

In addition to Miss Le Gallienne and Sidney Blackmer, several of the present company were members of the New York cast, including Thomas Mitchell, George Henry Trader, Mary Kennedy, Alice Bromley Wilson, Margaret Mosier and Leatta Miller. Newcomers in the road company are Betty Linley, B. N. Lewin, Louise Treadwell and Frank M. Gillespie.

William Rock, comedian and dancer, had a revue of his own several years ago, and has again returned to the role of producer. His current opus is said to have been constructed with the comedy element chiefly in view. There are 22 scenes, with lyrics by Louis Wesley, tunes by Leon Rosebrook, and such plot as there is by Rock and Billy B. Van. James J. Corbett makes bold to sing in a male quartet. Others among the principals are Marion Sunshine, Jue Quon Tai, a Chinese contralto; Irene and Bernice Hart, Jay M. Regan, Avey and O'Neil, Johnny Dale, Helen Eby, Hazel Webb and Ernestine Myers, the latter a solo dancer who is to be seen in an Oriental fantasy and a Spanish number. Hand-some settings and a big chorus are promised. There will be a matinee on Saturday only, and an extra performance next Sunday night.

This week's Orpheum bill is headed by the dancing comedian, Roscoe Ails, supported by Kate Pullman, a jazz band and Holtworth's Harmony Hounds. Nellie V. Nichols promises some new songs, and Solly Ward will be seen in a one-act comedy called "Babies." Georgia Campbell, Robert Buchanan and others will offer a cycle of songs from Dixie. Others on the bill are Joe Cook, the "one-man vaudeville show," Alexander brothers and Evelyn in their rubber ball act; Hildegarde Lachmann and Florence Ellsworth, and Miss Ioleen, a novelty wire dancer.

Headliners at other theaters will be: Grand, "The Silver Fountain," with poses of celebrated paintings; Italo, the Ford Sisters, excellent dancers; Empress, Gautier's Toy Shop, a novel trained animal act; and Leo's Garrick, the Five Melody Mads. The Standard's bill is "Tittle Tattle."

JOHN BURROUGHS, HOT AND MAN. By Clara Barrus, M. D. A fascinating biography of our distinguished naturalist, by his secretary and friend, Dr. Barrus.

ENGLAND AFTER THE WAR. By Frank Dinnot. The author, a world-famous publicist, presents a complete picture of England as it is since the war. Among things discussed, are "The Mood of the People," "Invasion by Labor," "Ireland," "Lloyd George," and "Sport and a Sense of Humor."

BOYS' BOOK OF MODEL BOATS. By Raymond F. Yates. Every boy likes to build boats, and this is a description of how to make all kinds of small ones. A much-needed addition to the literature of this subject. Contains over a hundred illustrations and drawings.

AMERICAN TOWNS AND PEOPLE. By Harrison Rhodes. A series of interpretations of some of the less conspicuous characteristics of our principal cities and the people who inhabit them. There are chapters on Boston, Washington, St. Louis, the Californian, the Society Woman, the American Child, and a delightful picture of the High Kingdom of the Movies. Entertaining and humorous, but behind it all, one sees thoughtfulness and discernment.

Cured His Piles

Now 88 Years Old But works At Trade of Blacksmith and Peels Younger Since Piles Are Gone.

The oldest active blacksmith in Michigan is still pounding his anvil in the town of Homer—thanks to my internal method for treating piles.

Mr. Jacob Lyon, Homer, Mich.

I wish that you could hear him tell of his many experiences with hemorrhoids, salves, dilators, etc., before he tried my method. Here is a letter just received from him:

Mr. E. R. Page, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir: I want you to know what your treatment has done for me. I had suffered with piles for many years and used suppositories and all kinds of treatments, but never got relief until I tried yours. Am now completely cured. Although I am 88 years old, and the oldest active blacksmith in Michigan, I feel years younger since the piles have left me. I will surely recommend it to all I know who suffer this way. You can use my letter any way you wish and I hope it will lead others to try this wonderful remedy.

Yours truly,

J. L. LYON.
There are thousands of afflicted people suffering with piles who have never yet tried the one sensible way of treating them.

Don't be out. Don't waste money on foolish salves, ointments, dilators, etc., but send today for a Free Trial of my internal method for the healing of Piles. No matter whether your case is of long standing or recent development—whether it is occasional or permanent—you should send for this free trial treatment.

No matter where you live—no matter what your age or occupation—if you are troubled with piles, my method will relieve you promptly. This liberal offer of free treatment is too important for you to neglect a single day. Write now. Send no money. Simply mail the coupon—but do this now—TODAY.

INDIANS' PRESIDENT SAYS PLEA GOT FIRST RESPONSE HERE

Thomas L. Sloan, president of the Society of American Indians, which closed its annual convention here Nov. 19, on departing from St. Louis for his home in Washington, D. C., declared he was convinced that St. Louis would be written into history as the place where the Indians made their plea to the people of the country which brought an immediate response. He said:

"The molding of public opinion at St. Louis will radiate out over the country until such force is gained as will be irresistible on behalf of the Indians, giving to them freedom and the right of self expression and the management of their own affairs. It will also prevent further wrongs being perpetrated upon them by officials and employees of the Indian Bureau, and the demands of the Indians backed by public opinion developed here will cause Congress to grant remedial legislation that will make it possible for Indians to protect themselves against vandals who invade their rights as individuals."

Sloan also sent the Post-Dispatch a resolution unanimously adopted by the association extending heartfelt thanks to the citizens of St. Louis for the interest, sympathy and support given, and to the societies and clubs for the entertainment of the delegates while attending the convention.

"I Have Been Using Mentho-Laxene for a Number of Years"

The foregoing quotation is similar to scores of others, written by most intelligent people throughout America. Mrs. H. B. Bartlett, Hopdale, Mass., writes in part: "I have been using Mentho-Laxene for a number of years, and find it the most effective cough remedy on the market; have recommended it to a number of others, etc." Ask yourself this question: "Would anyone use Mentho-Laxene for a number of years if it was not the most effective cough remedy on the market?" For colds, coughs, bronchitis, hoarseness, whooping cough, catarrh of the throat, difficult breathing, and even asthma, it is quite the most efficient, and cheapest good medicine anyone can find. It is pure and concentrated in 2½ oz. bottles with directions for making a full pint of cough syrup easily at home. It effects a saving of from two to three dollars—which is worth while in these days of high costs. Every bottle is guaranteed satisfactory by the makers. Your druggist has it or can get it from his jobber.

NEW YORK

The Foremost Style Creator of America

THE GOWNS

The latest creations, including gorgeous evening gowns, demure afternoon frocks, severely tailored walking suits, furs, hats, shoes and hosiery, all will be on exhibition.

The material gathered by Hickson will make the most resplendent display ever seen in a Fashion Revue. Each garment will bear the name of Hickson, assuring you that the parade of styles will be unparalleled.

SEE THE $30,000 FUR

This wrap, costing a large fortune, was brought from New York to St. Louis under special guard. It will be displayed before the public for the first time this afternoon.

LIVING MODELS

Fifteen of the most beautiful girls ever assembled on a stage, headed by two famous Hickson models from New York, will be principals in the Revue. Each possesses the exquisite poise and grace necessary to perfect modeling.

A runaway over the orchestra pit has been constructed, permitting the audience to obtain a "close-up" view of the very latest gowns and frocks decreed by Dame Fashion.

STOP CATARRH! OPEN NOSTRILS AND HEAD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Relieves Head-Colds at Once

If your nostrils are clogged and your head is stuffed and you can't breathe freely because of a cold or catarrh, just get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm at any drug store. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream into your nostrils and let it penetrate through every air passage of your head, soothing and healing the inflamed, swollen mucous membrane and you get instant relief. Ah! how good it feels. Your nostrils are open, your head is clear, no more hawking, snuffling, blowing; no more headache, dryness or struggling for breath. Ely's Cream Balm is just what sufferers from head colds and catarrh need. It's a delight.

VASSAR COLLEGE ALUMNAE TO MEET HERE THIS WEEK

Program Includes Business and Social Sessions for Friday and Saturday.

The annual meeting of the Associated Alumnae of Vassar College will be held for the first time in St. Louis this week, with a number of sessions arranged for next Friday and Saturday. Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, president of Vassar College, will attend the meeting, and will speak at a public meeting next Saturday night at the Graham Memorial Chapel, Washington University. Dr. A. Ross Hill, president of the University of Missouri, and Chancellor Hall of Washington University, will also speak.

There will also be a public meeting Friday afternoon at 3:30 at the Hotel Statler with a social service conference at which the speakers will be Dr. C. A. Ellwood of the University of Missouri, and Dr. Borden S. Veeder. Friday evening there will be a reception for the visiting alumnae at the Artists' Guild given by the St. Louis Vassar branch. Saturday morning there will be an automobile ride at 10 a. m. and at 11:30 the annual business session will be held at the Hotel Statler, which will be followed by a luncheon, when the speakers will be Miss Helen Kenyon of Clifdale, New York, president of the Alumnae Association, Miss Harriet Sawyer of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., executive secretary, and Miss Elsie Butler of St. Louis, who has just returned from France, where she continued the work the Vassar Unit started during the war. Saturday evening the College Club of St. Louis will give a buffet supper at McMillan Hall to the association. Mrs. Horton Watkins is president and Miss Margaret Knight is secretary and treasurer.

Elderly People Need This Remedy in Medicine Chest

To relieve chronic constipation, always keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin handy for use when needed.

NEARLY all people as they advance in age suffer from chronic constipation. Many, however, are indifferent to the laxative they use, on the theory that "they are all alike." That is a great mistake.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, for example, is a mild, gentle liquid laxative, and it does not lose its effect with repeated use. It so trains the bowel muscles that in time medicines of all kinds can be dispensed with.

A sixty-cent bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last many months. The prescription was written thirty years ago by Dr. W. B. Caldwell, a well-known family doctor, who is himself now in his 82nd year and can appreciate what chronic constipation must mean to elderly people; how it brings on headaches, colds, loss of appetite and sleep, heaviness and a general dull feeling.

Every home that has an elderly man or woman should be provided with a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Eight million bottles were bought at drug stores last year. It is a truly wonderful constipation remedy.

TRY IT FREE

Send me your name and address and I will send you a free trial bottle of my Syrup Pepsin. Address me Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 513 Washington Street, Monticello, Illinois. Every body now and then needs a laxative, and it is well to know the best. Write me today.

35 BOOTHS TO FIGURE IN "BATTLE OF PARIS"

Legion to Hold First Annual Fall Festival at Coliseum Week of Dec. 7.

There will be 35 decorated booths at which souvenirs and other articles will be distributed at the first annual fall festival of the American Legion, to be held at the Coliseum this week, beginning Dec. 7, and entertainment for all tastes, from grand opera to prize-fighting, will be given. The affair has been denominated the "Battle of Paris," the significance of which all soldiers who saw Paris will understand, so a great attendance of American Legion men from St. Louis and vicinity is anticipated. Among those who have been engaged to contribute to the entertainment are Major-General Leonard Wood, M. E. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, George Sizer and city officials. The affair will open at 8 o'clock each evening and continue until midnight.

Civic and commercial organizations are supporting the Legion posts in the arrangements.

Senator Spencer will speak on the national aspect of business at a luncheon of the Lumbermen's Exchange of St. Louis, to be held Tuesday at 12:15 p. m. at Hotel Statler.

INTER-CITY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SUGGESTED

Belleville Man Wants Commercial Bureau of City and East Side Merged.

Suggestion that St. Louis and East Side business men begin a campaign to promote co-operation, through the establishment of an organization to be known as "The Inter-City of St. Louis Chamber of Commerce," is contained in a letter received by W. Frank Carter, president of the Chamber of Commerce, from C. H. Casbolt of 2105 Cherokee street, connected with the Ideal Stencil Machine Co. of Belleville. Casbolt suggests that the present St. Louis Chamber of Commerce alter its name in accordance with the suggestion and obtain a new charter, if this is necessary to legalize the inter-city plan.

Under Casbolt's plan each of the commercial organizations in the East Side commercial district would merge with the new chamber. He says that under the present system each individual organization takes interest only in the affairs of the city in which it is located.

Casbolt says that St. Louis is practically dependent on Illinois for its milk and fuel supplies. He points out that East St. Louis, in particular, is a natural industrial site and predicts that if East Side organizations are merged with the central St. Louis chamber the progress of the next decade will be enormous.

Casbolt declares that indifference and antagonism between the West and East Side districts is the one great reason for the showing of the last census. Chicago and later Detroit, with more effective co-operation that the St. Louis district, could not help but gain disproportionately in view of the natural advantages of St. Louis, he says.

New Price Levels, Bringing Cheaper Money, Make Union Electric 7 Per Cent Preferred Stock More Desirable Than Ever Before

New low price levels for the products of American farms and mills mean cheaper interest rates. Union Electric Light & Power Company 7% preferred stock, of which more than $1,500,000 has been sold across the Company's counters, direct to home investors, during the past twelve months, at par or better, is today a more desirable investment, for those who want maximum income with real safety, than ever before.

Under the State's order authorizing issuance and sale of this stock, to finance the growth of the Company's public service properties, each share must pay its owner 7% a year of cash dividends—$1.75 every three months—before any dividends can be paid on the Company's $11,000,000 of common stock.

If you have any sum from $100 to $10,000, on which you wish to make sure of a regular and dependable 7% income, with absolute certainty that each $100 you invest is backed by more than $100 worth of permanent, necessary, income-producing property, it will be worth your while to send us your name and address, or telephone us, and let us send a salesman or a circular, as you prefer, to explain this offer in detail.

SPECIAL EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS AT MUSEUM

73 Works of Henry G. Keller of Cleveland on Display Until End of Year.

The City Art Museum, in Forest Park, is now showing as a special exhibition a group of 73 paintings by Henry G. Keller of Cleveland.

The subjects are all American ones, of Western and Middle-Western scenes, and are executed in tempera and water color. The novelty of the group lies in the manner in which the artist has attempted to use in each instance the method of painting most fitted to interpret the particular aspect of nature which he has depicted. The result is that some of the pictures are "tonalistic," some impressionistic and some "realistic," while others are marked by the bold contour patterns of the post-impressionistic school.

If his subject is an atmospheric one, dependent for its beauty upon soft, delicate tones and harmonies, as a sunrise, or a landscape on a cloudy day, the artist paints it in the softly modulated colors characteristic of the tonalistic artists. Typical examples of this treatment in the exhibition are "Minnow-Gulls at Sunrise," "Lake Erie," "The Fisherman's Dory," and "The Old Cape Henry Light."

If the subject is a more vivacious one with bright sunlight or vibrant color, he adopts at once the high-keyed palette and the broken color of the impressionists, as in "New Hampshire Birch" and "In the Park." Still other subjects, particularly those containing bright-hued flowers in sunlight, impress him as being essentially brilliant color designs, and to make them give up their full "esthetic spirit," he adopts the bold pigments and striking color patterns of the post-impressionists, without, however, the distorted drawing which they often affect. Examples which he shows in this post-impressionistic style include "Sunflower Patterns," "Post-imp. Garden Picture," "The River and the Flower," and "Rocks and Cornucopia, California." Certain other pictures in the exhibition the artist classifies as "realistic," as for instance, "Fisherman's Shanty," "Huron, Ohio," and "The Horse Trader's Pasture." These give one the impression of being merely attempts at unimaginative photographic likenesses of commonplace scenes. Many of the remaining pictures in the collection do not fall readily into any of the above classifications, the artist having combined two or more methods as best suited to the subject in hand.

An unusual feature of Keller's paintings is that almost all of them are executed in tempera, the colors being fixed by a gummy or albumen medium, instead of the customary oil. Tempera has certain advantages of application, especially that of drying quickly, but it lacks much of the depth and vibrancy of oils, as an examination of certain of Keller's pictures will show.

The exhibition will remain at the Museum until the end of December.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 27.—
When Gov. Brough relinquishes the position of chief executive of Arkansas to Thomas C. McRae on Jan. 10, 1921, he will become a publicity man. The Governor has signed a four-year contract to direct the publicity of the Arkansas Chamber of Commerce, and will receive for his services $10,000 a year. Of the total amount, according to the contract, $4,000 is for expenses and $6,000 salary.

Beauty With Ability In the Essex Sedan

It is not easy to associate the beauty and exquisite charm of the Essex Sedan with the extraordinary ability through which it has excelled all other cars by so many famous official proofs.

Yet what else could account for the unusual satisfaction and contentment Essex owners feel in their cars.

Essex holds the greatest official endurance record of 3037 miles in 50 hours. Four different Essex cars have 4 times broken the transcontinental record between San Francisco and New York. It holds the 24-hour marks for both dirt track and open road running. And for cars its motor size it holds all official speed and endurance records from 1 to 50 hours.

Moreover Essex gives all the light type saving in fuel, tires and oil. In addition its endurance and reliability eliminate much repair expense that less durable cars incur.

SAFE DRIVERS' CLUB AFTER 50,000 MEMBERS

Campaign to Educate Owners in Effort to Make Safety Greater

A Safe Drivers' Club is being organized as a part of the campaign for 50,000 members by the St. Louis Safety Council.

Dr. R. S. Vitt, Coroner of the city of St. Louis, is chairman of the Safe Drivers' Club, and 60,000 letters containing sticker for wind shield of automobile, application blanks and membership card have been mailed to every driver in St. Louis. P. H.
Brockman is general chairman of the drive to begin Monday, and Joseph A. Schlecht is chairman of the automobile trades.

The qualifications for membership are:

1. To study and be intimately informed of the traffic laws of the State of Missouri, city of St. Louis, and St. Louis County.
2. To conform to these laws when driving.
3. To use proper influence as a citizen at all times. To discourage reckless driving and create a sentiment in support of all measures reasonably calculated to make the streets safe for all.
4. Membership is $1 per year per car.

The object of the Safe Drivers'
Club is to make every driver in St.
Louis a safe driver, and thus eliminate street accidents to a minimum.

Immediately after the organization is perfected there will be meetings held in the interest of carrying out the objects of the club and a Safe Drivers' School will be established and open to motorists—men be distributed to the members as one and women. Safety literature will be the monthly service features.

The first object of the Safe Drivers' Club is to acquaint the drivers and prospective drivers with traffic rules and regulations.

The Safe Drivers' Club and the campaign for 50,000 members in the Safety Council, whose object will be to maintain for St. Louis the position of being the safest city in the United States, has received the endorsement of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and also its support, as it has the endorsement and support of the Automobile Trade Association, the North St. Louis Business Men's Association, the Tower Grove Heights Improvement Association, the Parent and Teachers' Association, and a number of other commercial and civic organizations.

Philip H. Brockman, president of the De Luxe Automobile Co., and president of the Automobile Dealers' and Manufacturers' Association, is chairman of the membership drive for 50,000 members. Mr. Brockman is receiving the support of the Automobile Dealers' and Manufacturers' Association in the safety campaign.

The officers of the Safe Drivers' Club are: Dr. R. S. Vitt, Coroner, chairman; Clarence Curby, Judge
George E. Mix, City Court No. 2;
Judge Anthony Ittner, City Court No.
1; H. P. Riefing, president Missouri Automobile Club; Robert E. Lee, secretary St. Louis Automobile Dealers' and Manufacturers' Association;
James Wallace, general manager
Yellow Taxicab Co.; Carl L. Smith, manager St. Louis Safety Council.

16-YEAR-OLD CAR HAS MANY FEATURES OF 1920

"Not for sale" is the sign on one Franklin model in the showroom of the Franklin Motor Car Co. It is one of the first 600 cars built by the Franklin factory, bearing the factory number 482, and is of the vintage of 1904.

Compared with the motor cars with which we are familiar today, it is a strange looking car, but in its day it was as stylish as the most rashly streamline car of 1920. It has neither top nor windshield. Its speed did not make the latter a prime necessity. Traffic did not require two head lights in those days and the one acetylene lamp in front was considered sufficient.

The engine is at right angle with the frame and is cranked from the side, and the power being transmitted to the rear wheels by means of a chain and sprocket. The strangest appearing part of the whole car is the arrangement of the tonneau. The door is in the rear and the passengers sat on small seats in each corner.

Notwithstanding its weird appearance it bears many of the features that today distinguish the Franklin and which have been consistently used by the manufacturer. The motor is air cooled and is of the valve-in-the-head type, which is the same general type power plant now used.
In those days they used but four cylinders, while today the Franklin is a six.

Some of the other specifications could be taken out of a Franklin catalog today, such as: wood frame, tubular front axle, aluminum body and hood.

The car was traded in about a year ago by A. E. Spielberg, who was at that time the Franklin distributor in South Bend, Ind. When he came to St. Louis he had the car sent here as an example of how Franklin has adhered to his principles from the very start.

TRUCK MEN APPOINT VALUATION COMMITTEE

At a meeting of the Commercial Car Bureau of the St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers and Dealers' Association, held Friday at the Marquette Hotel, at which L. H. Amrine, vice president of the Scudder Motor Truck Co., presided, two important committees were appointed. One of these, headed by C. A. Aldrich, will devise plans for the closer valuation of used trucks. The other, of which H. P. Pederspiel is chairman, will arrange for a series of lectures for local and out-of-town dealers to instruct them in the intricacies of time payment sales of trucks. C. R. Collins, general manager of the National Association of Commercial Haul-ers, spoke to the meeting of the workings of his organization and its intention to co-operate with the dealers in commercial cars.

BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER TO PLAY CHOPIN WORK

F-Minor Concerto Is Pianist's Offering at This Week's Symphony Concerts.

This week's symphony concert, on Friday afternoon and Saturday night, at the Odeon, will present as soloist the distinguished pianist, Mma. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, whose contribution to the program will be Chopin's Concerto in F minor. Mma. Bloomfield-Zeisler, when a pupil of the famous Leschetzky, was described by him as "my electrical wonder." She has not appeared with the local orchestra for several years.

After two changes, Director Zach has finally decided that the principal orchestral work at these concerts will be Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor, one of the most scholarly and also popular works in his repertoire. The complete program is as follows:

Symphony for Orchestra, in D Minor Franck
1. Lento; Allegro non troppo.
2. Allegretto.
3. Allegro non troppo.
Concerto No. 2, in F minor, for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 21 Chopin
1. Maestoso.
2. Larghetto.
3. Allegro vivace.

Orchestral Suite, Impressions of Italy Charpentier
1. Serenade. 2. At the Fountain.
3. On Muleback. 4. On the Summit.
5. Naples.

Steindl Today's Soloist.

H. Max Steindl, leader of the violoncello section, will have his annual appearance as a "pop" soloist during this afternoon's concert at the Odeon, and will offer Leon Boellmann's Symphonic Variations for violoncello and orchestra. The program follows:

Marche Joyeuse Chabrier
Hungarian Dances, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 Brahms Tone-Picture After a Russian Fairytale, Baba-Yaga-Liadlow Symphonic Variations for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 35 Boellmann
Andante and Minuet, from Ariane Massenet
Entr'acte, Sevillana, from Don Cesar de Bazan Massenet
Suite No. 2, from Carmen Bizet

At next week's regular concert the soloist will be Emilia Cogora, and the feature of the orchestra program will be the first St. Louis performance of a symphonic poem, "The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla Kahn," after the poem of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, by the late Charles T. Griffes, an American composer who died just as his works were gaining a hearing.

A Mystery Which Is No Mystery At All—A Never Failing Way to Cheat Father Time. Also Certain Way to Make H. Grow.

By Madame Harco
It is really astounding how quickly the skin can be brought back to a youthful plumpness and vigor when the proper method is employed. The wrinkle removing results are secured when you prepare a simple formula yourself. You are then sure that it contains the proper materials that will produce the results. By mixing a tablespoonful of glycerine with the contents of a two-ounce package of spot in a half pint of water you obtain the skin cream necessary. By liberal use of this you will find that the will become more refined in texture and free from wrinkles, and small, will very quickly disappear. The spot can be treated at any drug store. You be grateful that you learned of a remarkable opportunity.

But—When You Select a Reo You Are Sure!

There is an element of risk in the purchase of any commodity—unless you select the one about whose superiority there can be no question.

For example, when in buying a piano you select one whose name and fame stand out above all the rest—not by mere self-exploitation, but by common accord of users—you know—and every musician will tell you—that a better cannot be made.

Perhaps there is one as good—you might, by taking a chance, find one. But of the one you have selected there is no question. So why take any chance?

Similarly with talking machines, furniture—or automobiles.

Outstanding above the many of mediocrity are one or two certain makes about which there is no question.

There's an unanimity of opinion about them that is the best endorsement of your own judgment—the best assurance of satisfaction.

You eliminate all element of risk when you buy one of those.

Among motor cars Reo enjoys such eminence.

Not even the most envious maker or dealer will deny Reo quality or Reo value.

Ask any motorist, any salesman, any dealer, and he will say, "Reo is a good automobile."

There's no denying such quality. It is everywhere conceded.

Reo always has made good automobiles—so long and so consistently the very name has become a synonym for quality.

There's another phase to this too.

When, after years of satisfactory service, you want to dispose of your Reo to get a later model, you'll find that unanimity of opinion is a real asset to you.

For used Reos command an higher percentage of their original cost and a readier sale, than any other car of its size or type or class.

Proof of that you can ascertain from any handler of used cars. He'll tell you his Reos are his readiest sellers and command the best prices.

There's still another reason for this latter condition also.

First price of a Reo is so much lower than you are asked for cars of similar size and capacity—though not comparable in quality to a Reo—that depreciation has already been largely discounted when you buy your Reo new.

Why experiment then—why assume any element of risk—why chance disappointment in the slightest degree—if you can get a Reo?

There's the rub—if you can get a Reo!

Such quality, such value is always in demand.

Only way is to place your order at once. Today—won't be a minute too soon.

Price is f. o. b. factory. Plus Special Federal Tax

A Mystery Which is No Mystery
At All—A Never Failing Way to Cheat Father Time. Also a Certain Way to Make Hair Grow.

By Madame Marie

It is really astounding how quickly the skin can be brought back to a youthful plumpness and vigor when the proper method is employed. These wrinkles removing results can be secured when you prepare this simple formula yourself. You are then sure that it contains the proper materials that will produce the results that you desire. By mixing one tablespoonful of glycerine and the contents of a two-ounce package of epsol in a half pint of water you obtain the satiny cream necessary. By liberal use of this you will find that the skin will become more refined in texture, wrinkles and wrinkles, large and small, will very quickly begin to disappear. The cream can be obtained at any drug store. You will be grateful that you learned of this remarkable opportunity.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

MR. C. N. D.—When you apply to the hair any substance which will actually force the hair roots to grow and to stop hair falling, you very soon can notice the tremendous difference in its increased length and vigor. The hair root developer given here acts the same way. It has been demonstrated to have a very remarkable effect in forcing hair to grow luxuriantly. Think to fill out bald spots quickly. With a half-pint of water and a pint of bay rum mix the contents of a one-ounce package of bay rum. This can be obtained from any drug store. If preferred you can use a full pint of witchhazel instead of the water and bay rum.

MISS AVELLE—The use of tonic and steaming the face are of little value for removing blackheads. The way to get rid of them in a few minutes is this: Get some borax in a wet cloth and rub the blackheads with it. You will be astonished to see them almost entirely gone.

MISS D. G. C.—Soap can not be used to remove the skin's impurities which affect the vigor of the hair. Epsol, however, will remove these accumulations by dissolving them away. Try a teaspoonful of epsol in half a cup of water as a head-wash. It is glorious. A twenty-five cent package of epsol contains enough for a dozen shampoos.

SALLOW—A very beautiful complexion can be obtained in very quick time by the use of a very rich cream which you should make yourself. It can be done in a few moments. From your drug store get a one-ounce package of sinton and mix contents with two tablespoonfuls of glycerine in a pint of water. In a very few days you will see the difference in your complexion, and you will lay aside many of the things you have been using heretofore in order to produce the same result. You can obtain the sinton from your drug store.

MISS ROSIE—It is just as easy to remove superfluous hairs perfectly and without any trouble whatever as using your face lotion. Moistens the hairs with a little epsol solution. This dissolves the hair almost magically and it can be wiped off with a swish of the soap. Leaving the skin as smooth and white as before. Do not paste or powder. Epsol solution is to be had at any drug store. It is ready to use. There is nothing to mix.

MR. N. M.—A face powder that blends beautifully with the skin and is extraordinarily fine, is "Freese Beauty Powder." There is no question about its superiority over all other face powders. Try it. You can secure it from your drug store in any of the cities.

RACHMANINOFF WORK, 'THE BELLS', TUESDAY

Pageant Choral Society to Present Third Symphony on Poe's Poem, at Odeon.

The most ambitious event in the history of the Pageant Choral Society will be its presentation, Tuesday night, at the Odeon, of Sergei Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 3, Op. 36, "The Bells," after the poem of Edgar Allan Poe. This work had its first American performance on Feb. 6 of this year at the hands of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus, and the following soloists: Florence Hinkle, soprano; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Frederick Patton, bass.

The Pageant Society will be supported by the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, and by Miss Alma Patterson, soprano; Robert Quait, tenor, and Frederick Patton, bass. Frederick Fischer will conduct. It is stated that, outside the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, the Pageant Choral Society is the only American organization to have undertaken the Rachmaninoff opus, and that this will be its third hearing in this country.

The famous Russian composer and virtuoso sketched "The Bells" at Rome during 1913, beginning in January, and orchestrated it in the summer of the same year on his estate in Russia. Two manuscript copies were made. One of these was retained by the composer, and was lost when he fled at the outset of the Bolshevik revolution.

Manuscript Found in Germany. The other had been placed in the hands of a publisher in Leipzig just before the war. Rachmaninoff, of course, could get no word of his manuscript during the war, and on his first visit to this city, two winters ago, expressed fear that the work was irretrievably lost. However, the German publisher had preserved both manuscript and plates, and copies of the symphony were finally received in this country by way of Denmark.

Rachmaninoff employed a Russian translation of Poe's poem, by Balmont, which the composer pronounced an excellent piece of versification, but which, owing to differences between the two languages, required meters varying from those of the original. Retranslated into English to fit Rachmaninoff's rhythms, the present text does not, of course, correspond precisely to Poe's poem.

Elaborate Instrumentation.

On the occasion of the Philadelphia performance, a detailed analysis of the work, by Philip H. Goepf, was printed in the programs. It is stated that the symphony is scored for two flutes, and piccolo; two oboes and English horn, three clarinets and bass clarinet, two bassoons and contra-bassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, three kettle drums, bells, triangle, tambourine, drum, cymbals, piano, celesta, harp and strings; with a part for organ in the last movement. The vocal score comprises soprano, tenor and bass solos, with a chorus of sopranos, altos, tenors and basses, at times further subdivided. The following is a resume of Goepf's synopsis:

In the first movement, the composer has found an ideal subject for modern dissonance, in the shimmering tang of parallel fifths in the high wood. We almost lose the first whispering "Listen!" of the voices; we are overwhelmed by the following vehement shout on high chords in the midst of the jolly jingling, with the clear line of tune in a solo voice. "On the icy midnight air" falls the echoing phrase of the cold high flute over low murmuring violins.

The ringing revel ceases; slower grows the motion; the chorus merely hums the tune. But quickly the full festive sound rings out again, and now comes a jovial round, or canon, of chasing voices on the tune, the solo leading, with a counter theme in the violins and a rising ecstasy of calls that are lost in a tempest of untimely jubilation.

"Rhythmic Chiming Bells."

In the second section "The mellow wedding bells" strike clear and soft, in low reeds and horns. A pure lyric episode follows, without the voices. At the height, to swirling harmonies on the harp, the voices sing in low tones the song of the golden bells, and the solo tenor chants a melody of human bliss. Once more is heard the sound of the "rush and euphony" in the bells. Presto, to the weird whistling of tremolo violins, come the first sounds of the alarm bells, with merciless clash of sound and rhythm. In swift descending tones the voices begin their call in the midst of the tumult; then they rise in accent and speed, a quick-running symbol of flame. With the "terror" comes a new crash of somber dissonance. There develops a veritable fugue of fire, until all is merged in a mighty sustained tremolando of strings, with chords in the wood, over which the flame—in the voices—proclaims its triumph. Finally comes a chorale song on the mournful epilogue, and a sudden, vehement end.

A "Muffled Monotone."

The last movement of the iron bells begins slowly in a strange swaying of somber chords, for harp, horns and strings. The chorus enters forth with expressive dissonance. The motion hurries to Allegro; wilder goes the pace, madder the race, of the demon in the bells—ever with the continuing peal of the first rhythmic chords. After the fullest resonance of the whole work, the speed and volume abate; in tranquil major come soothing echoes of bells, and a mournful tune sounds softly in rapt serenity.

In addition to "The Bells," the Choral Society will also present Rosini's "Stabat Mater," with the same soloists, reinforced by Miss Alma Beck, contralto.

CATARRH MAYR'S PINE NEEDLE BALM

A Comfort and A Corrective

THE first cool days of autumn and early winter have a tremendous effect on Catarrh indications. Flu and other infectious germs abound. They find a harbor in the nasal passages affected with Catarrh. Mayr's Pine Needle Balm opens and clears these passages, keeping them in a clean, wholesome condition. Healthy nasal passages do not harbor germs. Catching a cold in the head, nose or throat means that a germ has been taken in and will develop unless the inflammatory condition is at once corrected. Do not neglect colds, they very often lead to chronic Catarrh which is embarrassing and sometimes offensive to others. Prolonged Catarrhal affection often causes foul breath. Mayr's Pine Needle Balm promotes natural breathing by opening up the nasal passages. It is a pure natural product. Soothing and pleasant to use. When Catarrh, colds of the head, nose and throat have made you feel disagreeable, Mayr's Pine Needle Balm will prove a comfort and corrective.

Excellent for children as well as adults. Sold in two sizes, 30c and 60c.

Hygienic Note—To those susceptible to frequent colds the following advice is extended: Avoid "coddling" habits and overheated rooms, encourage fresh air habits, take a cold water bath, spray or sponge each morning, followed by a brisk rubbing of the body with a coarse bath towel. One who can safely resist the shock of a cold plunge or even of sponging may with confidence expect to resist ordinary drafts and exposure.

PROMPTLY REPORT FAILURE TO RECEIVE ANSWERS.

BIG DEAL WAITS ON DEED'S RETURN FROM SOUTH AFRICA

Carries Title to One of Several Parcels of Downtown Land Being Assembled for Massive Building.

WILL MEAN MUCH FOR QUIET STREET

Several Major Operations, Viewed as Beginning of Realty Revival, Said to Be in Final Stage.

By Berry Moore.

With several major operations in the central business area virtually in the final stage, one of them attended by definite plans for the erection of a structure of massive proportions on a street quiescent for nearly a generation, St. Louis realty circles are keyed to a high pitch of expectancy.

As forecast in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch, the revival taking form will receive its chief stimulus from development south of Olive street, and not "north" of that thoroughfare, as inadvertently stated last week. The site for this noteworthy project has been secured east of Twelfth street. The promoter has kept his building plans concealed.

The conjecture is that the site has been acquired for other a hotel or for automobile purposes, owing to the fact that it is on a traffic center of the first importance and one having practically direct communication with Union Station. A hotel is Oren Scott's guess. The site comprises a dozen or more parcels, which, according to one of the owners, have not more than paid carrying charges, nearly three-fourths of which represented taxes, for many years. These are exclusive of maintenance charges and because of them the holdings have been a liability rather than an asset, it is said.

Waiting for Return of Deed. Details of this deal will be ready for announcement as soon as the deed to one of the parcels has been returned from South Africa, where it was sent by Cornet & Zellig for execution, the interest in question being held by a descendant of one of the old French families of St. Louis, who apparently have left or pooled their real estate interests with Cornet & Zellig. Incidentally, this is the second journey to South Africa, the grantor in the first instance having neglected to have his wife acknowledge the instrument.

A half block, embracing the southwest corner of Ninth and Chestnut streets and the southeast corner of Tenth and Chestnut streets, was originally sought for this project, but the promoter was unable to buy the latter corner, which forms the site of the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Co.'s building. The southwest corner of Ninth and Chestnut streets, having a quarter of a block and on which an old building, is owned by a client of John Dockery & Son, who, it is understood, are negotiating with other interests which seek this site for a large improvement.

Upbuilding Process Slow. The upbuilding of Chestnut street began about 15 years ago with the erection of the Liggett building, now the International Life building, a six-story office structure, at the southeast corner of Eighth street, and the eight-story building of the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Co., at the southeast corner of Tenth and Chestnut streets, by the Liggett estate, promoted by the Rutledge & Kilpatrick Real Estate Co. The thoroughfare was, however, unresponsive to these enterprises, due, perhaps, to their character, especially that of the latter, which is of the wholesale nature.

Several years ago August A. Busch purchased the half block on the west side of Twelfth street, from Chestnut to Market streets, ostensibly as a site for a hotel structure, which was to serve as a memorial to his father, Adolphus Busch, founder of the Anheuser-Busch Brewery, but which so far has not been built.

Other Important Deals.

Important deals are being engineered by J. A. Epstein and James M. Carpenter & Co. One involves the control of a large downtown holding, recently taken over by a life insurance company for a loan. This deal constitutes a trade with several angles.

Negotiations are pending for other downtown properties, several of which involve extensive improvements, but which as yet have not been taken form. That large things are in the chrysalis stage in the central business district is clearly manifest, but it is not believed that they will develop before the end of the year, when rates for

Lumberman Purchases 12-Room Residence From Insurance Man

BRANCH F. SPENCER, of the lumber firm of T. H. Garrett & Co., has purchased No. 4468 West Pine boulevard, the former head of real estate agent and operator of the Missouri State Life Insurance Company.

The house has 12 rooms, a hot water heating plant, three baths and hardwood floors throughout. The improvements also include a two-story garage. The lot is 62½ by 212 feet.

BUYS $250,000 SITE ON WHICH TO EXPAND

Paper Can and Tube Co. to Remove From Big Industrial District to Maplewood.

As a site for a $250,000 factory, the St. Louis Paper Can and Tube Co. has purchased 13 acres on the Big Bend road and the tracks of the Terminal Railway Association, within the corporate limits of Maplewood.

The purchase was made in the name of the Martha Realty Co., through the switch property department of the Mercantile Trust Co. The land was owned by the Christopher-Simpson Iron Co., which is erecting a large plant in that district, and which has extensive acreage there. The land was originally owned by the estate of the late L. V. Cartan, a leading real estate agent and operator in St. Louis 25 or 30 years ago.

The purchasing company, now located on Union avenue, near Birchwood road, has disposed of that site, where it had no room for expansion. The plant of the Christopher-Simpson Co., which is approaching completion, is on an adjoining site. The big factories, it is suggested, will create considerable demand for labor in the vicinity of Maplewood. The Christopher-Simpson Co. will employ men exclusively, and its new neighbor principally girls.

FIVE STORES AND TEN FLATS, ALSO RESIDENCE, SOLD BY TERRY

Albert T. Terry & Co. report having sold for a client, five stores and 10 flats at 1094-14 North Vandeventer avenue, and 3890-94 Windsor place to Mr. Niemoller, who purchased for investment. The same firm in connection with Kent Jarvis, sold the home of Mr. McArdle, formerly of St. Louis, now of New York, 24 Algonquin lane, Webster Groves, Mo., to A. R. Deacon.

money probably will have eased somewhat, according to James M. Francis of Francis & Kunz.

Significant interest is being displayed in Washington avenue, especially in the resident section, and a number of which, from Jefferson to Grand avenues, having been greatly enhanced by the improvement.

Many Deals in Negotiation. J. I. Epstein is conducting negotiations for the sale of many high-class residences, as well as for apartments, in the western part of the city. He says he is considering another record month. He has recently placed on sale a group of handsome, Ames place houses, which are receiving much attention from prospective buyers, buildings of this type, erected or financed by him in the West End, representing an investment of upward of $1,000,000.

The Joseph P. Dickmann Real Estate Co. reports numerous sales and renewed demand for real estate for both homes and investment. This agency's long record of sales during November include many noteworthy transfers.

JUNIOR CHAMBER IN COMMUNITY MOVE

Plans to Work With Similar Bodies in Nearby Towns for Co-operation.

The Junior Chamber of Commerce, through the organization of a Greater St. Louis Committee, hopes to bring about a better understanding and a more cordial spirit of relationship between communities in the St. Louis industrial district.

Members of the local organization residing in communities contiguous to St. Louis, such as Clayton, University City, Wellston, Richmond Heights, Maplewood, Kirkwood and Webster Groves, will be appointed to cooperate with those communities, while representatives from the East St. Louis, Granite City and Belleville Junior Chambers of Commerce also will co-operate.

The program as outlined calls for a monthly meeting for discussions of the advantages of a united population, and the true situation as to annexation and the probable accomplishments of St. Louis with a united population of 1,500,000. There also will be discussions of problems of interest to the various communities and means of solving them for the good of all concerned.

Several sub-committees will be appointed to study specific questions which with their recommendations will be considered later by the general committee. Among the sub-committees will be one to study methods of annexation of all communities into a Greater St. Louis, and to prepare a report on each method. There also will be a subcommittee on publicity to further the idea of "St. Louis a united population of 1,500,000," and one to co-operate with the Million Population Club and county organizations interested in taxation.

JEWISH CHARITY SOCIETY WILL DEVOTE ITSELF TO CHILDREN

The Young Men's and Ladies' Hebrew Charity Society, which for the past 22 years has been engaged in general relief work among the poor of that faith, has decided to discontinue the general relief work, and will confine itself to Children's Welfare. This action was taken because the United Jewish Charities (now the Jewish Community Center) is covering the field.

The society has organized a Children's Welfare Bureau, and will engage the services of trained social workers and other assistants, and will open an office. In the Jewish Community Center, 3635 Page boulevard, with which it will co-operate. It will co-operate with all agencies to promote child hygiene, furnish proper nourishment for poor children, and will also provide summer vacations for school children, secure suitable private homes for temporary care of children when an emergency arises, and with all existing agencies in the city for the general welfare of the children.

3-YEAR $80,000 LOAN MADE AT 6 1-2 PER CT.

Money on Property Involved Formerly Available at 5 Per Cent.

The Southern Real Estate and Financial Co., of which the late Louis A. Cella was president, has borrowed $80,000 on a six-story building at the southeast corner of Washington avenue and Twenty-first street, occupied by the Emerson Electric Co. under lease.

The loan was made to the Edward K. Love Realty Co., trustee for the borrowing company in serial notes of $500, secured by a first deed of trust, and bears 6½ per cent interest for three years.

The rate is considered exceptionally good; rates for loans on property of that character being formerly available at 8 per cent. The property embraces nearly a block, extending through to St. Charles street.

ILLINOIS SOIL EXPERTS INVEST IN SOUTHEAST MISSOURI LAND

The Himmelfinger-Harrison Land Selling Co., of Cape Girardeau, Mo., reports several notable sales of farm land. This company has in the past few years sold nearly 100,000 acres of outcrop drained lands in Southeast Missouri, the greater part of which has been put in cultivation. The new settlers are largely from Central and Northern Illinois.

Among recent buyers of land in Southeast Missouri, according to Julien N. Friant, treasurer of the company, are several soil experts of the Agricultural College of the University of Illinois, including Dr. W. L. Burlison and W. C. Coffey, Prof. Henry P. Rusk and I. A. Madden, all of whom bought in the western part of New Madrid County.

Each of them made a personal investigation of the soil and country, and Dr. Burlison was especially enthusiastic. Friant said, "his expectation of rapid development being based upon the fact that the drainage work is about completed, and hard roads being built in every county, each one of which has voted road bonds on its own hook, the total being about $3,000,000. An intensive campaign is on that is expected to make Cape Girardeau County one of the centers of pure-bred Guernsey cattle, and of the dairying and fruit-raising industry."

RETURNS FROM OIL FIELDS TO RE-ENTER REALTY BUSINESS

Frank Sebastian Jr. has returned to St. Louis after several years of prospecting in the oil regions of Texas, to enter the real estate business, in which he was previously engaged here for several years. He has an office at Grand avenue and Arsenal street.

Sebastian received his real estate training under Theodore Hemmelmann, president of the Hemmelmann-Spauler Real Estate Co., and is regarded as thoroughly familiar with the methods and spirit of the newer American medical schools. The hope was also expressed that he will continue his research work at the same time and in addition, study the X-ray methods in use at Barnes hospital.

CAP COMPANY AND FLORISTS LEASE EIGHTH STREET QUARTERS

A lease has been taken by the Goldberger Cap Co. of the sixth floor, with the building at the southwest corner of Eighth street and Lucas avenue. The lease was negotiated by the Martin-Brett Real Estate Co. for the O. J. Lewis Mercantile Co.

The Martin-Brett company also leased to Mulanovich Florists, Inc., a corner store at Eighth and St. Charles streets, for the Childs company.

ZEPHYR HILLS TRACT BUNGALOWS SOLD AS SOON AS COMPLETED

The five and six room bungalows nearing completion in the Zephyr Hills tract, at the intersection of Yale and Lucas avenues, being built by the Brown Realty Co., nearly all have been sold as soon as completed.

The Brown company has built 75 bungalows in that subdivision in the past 18 months. The building loans were financed by the John S. Blake & Bro. Realty Co.

AGGREGATE OF $175,000 FROM RECENT SALES BY ALTHEIMER

Engene Altheimer has recently effected sales aggregating $175,000. These include four buildings, 412-46 Lindell boulevard, the northwest corner of Whittier street and Labadie avenue, consisting of two buildings of four flats each; the southeast corner of Market street and Exchange avenue, consisting of stores and flats; 4401 Arco avenue, single flat; 4467 Gibson street, and 3011 Bailey avenue.

108,390 Negroes in Baltimore. By the Associated Press. WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The negro population of Baltimore, Md., is 108,390, the Census Bureau announced today. The total white population is 625,374. The increase of the negro population since 1910 was 25,641, or 27.9 per cent, while the increase of whites was 151,687, or 32 per cent. The negro population of Cincinnati was announced by the bureau at 29,536, an increase of 9927, or 50.8 per cent.

Life Insurance Company's Building on Washington Avenue

THE building being erected on the north side of Washington avenue, between Compton and Leonard avenues, for the Central States Life Insurance Co., will form an attractive feature of that section of the thoroughfare, the perspective of which has been heightened through the erection of the widening project. The plan is by the T. P. Barnett Co., and in addition to its utilitarian character, the insurance company has provided for the comfort of its employees to a marked degree.

The building will be fireproof and is designed in the Spanish mission style of architecture. The exterior will be of cream-colored stucco, and the ornamental features of doorways and windows treated in carved Bedford stone. Ground on the east and west of the building will be laid out in Spanish gardens of formal character. Special attention has been devoted to natural lighting of the structure, together with its ventilation. A comprehensive scheme of artificial lighting will also be installed.

An attractive feature of the interior is the large patio, which forms a rotunda at the entrance, extending two stories in height, surrounded by arched cloister with balconies at second story.

GLOOM AMONG BARREL HOUSE HABITUÉS AT BAN ON "JAKE"

Prohibition Enforcement Agents Forbid Sale of Jamaica Ginger as Beverage.

Gloom, unlighted by a single ray of hope, hung over certain quarters on Market street yesterday, when news came of what certain gentry considered the untimely end of "Jake." For "Jake" had been a prime favorite with them since prohibition wiped out the barrel houses. No case of blues could be so bad that "Jake" could not dispel it, and paint the past, present and future in primrose hues.

But there will be nothing doing on "Jake" after Feb. 15, the enforcement of the Volstead act announced yesterday. "Jake," whose proper name is Jamaica ginger, will be as hard to obtain in the future as those numerous beverages for which it has been pinch-hit during recent months.

Jamaica ginger is put up as a training food for the stomach, and frequenters of the barrel street freights had found it all of that. Indeed, it had served as a cure for everything from spare time to family troubles. With its "kick," equal to that of 10 per cent proof whiskey, there was practically no ill which "Jake," as its advocates fondly termed it, could not banish from the realm of consciousness.

In fact, that was just the trouble. "Jake" became entirely too popular. Hospital doctors throughout the country have reported that about 50 per cent of the cases of alcoholism which they have treated since prohibition became effective were due to too much association with "Jake." So "Jake" will go under the ban. However, Feb. 15 is 80 days off.

HAFFNER GETS $40,000 VERDICT

United Railways filed for Sum on Loss of Leg by Coal Dealer.

A verdict of $40,000 for the loss of a leg was returned in favor of William Haffner, 59 years old, of 1909 Whittier street, a coal dealer, by a jury in Judge Grimm's court yesterday against the United Railways, Rolla Wells, receiver, and the Salla Fruit Co., 1029 North Third street.

Haffner sued for $50,000. On Feb. 6 last Haffner, his wife and son, were standing on the sidewalk at Benton street and Glasgow avenue, when he was injured by a truck of the fruit company which had been struck by a southbound case avenue car and knocked upon the sidewalk. Haffner was so badly injured that amputation of the left leg was necessary. Both defendants in the suit sought to avoid liability; the suit being jointly responsible by the jury.

U. S. Medal Awarded to Dr. de Page. By the Associated Press. WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—By direction of President Wilson, the War Department has awarded a distinction medal to Col. A. D. de Page, Surgeon-General of the Belgian army. The citation, made public today, said Col. de Page gave very valuable assistance to the medical officers of the American expeditionary forces, helping to save many American lives.

ENGLISH DOCTOR ENGAGED ON MEDICAL RESEARCH AT W. U.

Dr. Raymond A. Dart is Instructor in the Department of Anatomy.

Dr. Raymond A. Dart, demonstrator of anatomy in the University of London, is teaching and doing research work at Washington University School of Medicine and Barnes Hospital, under a special fellowship contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation, his work as instructor being in the department of anatomy, of which Dr. Robert J. Terry is professor. Advanced training for a second and British physician is being supported by the foundation, through a fellowship at Johns Hopkins University Medical School, Baltimore.

The two special fellowships are the result of a plan of co-operation between the division of medical education of the Rockefeller Foundation and British medical institutions, for advanced training of British physicians in this country. In the case of Dr. Dart, it was suggested that he engage in teaching, in order to become thoroughly familiar with the methods and spirit of the newer American medical schools. The hope was also expressed that he will continue his research work at the same time and in addition, study the X-ray methods in use at Barnes hospital.

IMMIGRATION BIGGEST PROBLEM, SAYS ORGANIZED LABOR PAPER

This Legislation the Most Important Before Next Congress, Is View of A. F. of L. Committee.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—Immigration legislation will be the most important problem to be considered at the approaching session of Congress, in the opinion of the Legislative Committee of the American Federation of Labor. In a special report appearing in the current issue of the American Federationist, the official organ of the labor federation, the committee gives immigration priority over amendments to the transportation act and steps to expand the United States employment service.

"With 2,000,000 idle and thousands of immigrants pouring into the country every day," the report says, "the dangers ahead of America are so serious that even the enemies of labor are fearful of the future."

"It is absolutely necessary for every national and international union, every State and city central and union to impress upon members of Congress that American labor, as well as all the people should be protected from the menace of excess immigration. No other question is of such vital importance to the workers."

A bill prepared by the American Federation of Labor and proposing an investigation of the continued high cost of necessities will be presented in both houses early in the session, the committee said.

BOSTON CHALLENGES ST. LOUIS TO C. OF C. MEMBERSHIP RACE

Proposition Accepted by Local Chamber That Now Has 5200 Enrolled.

The Chamber of Commerce in Boston has challenged the St. Louis chamber to a membership race, the object being to obtain more members than any other Chamber of Commerce in the world. The St. Louis organization at present stands third, with New York and Chicago in first and second place, respectively. The St. Louis chamber numbers 5200 members.

A telegram received yesterday by P. V. Bunn, general secretary of the St. Louis organization, from Robert S. Weeks, chairman of the Membership Committee, of the Boston chamber reads: "Understanding that you are in midst of an endeavor to secure new members, we challenge you to a contest for largest membership of any Chamber of Commerce in the world. Our members are responding finely to our call of 'every member get a member in November,' and while we are going to beat you we wish you the best of luck. Do you accept?"

The St. Louis chamber acceptance was wired last night as follows: "We certainly accept the challenge of Boston, the East against the West, for the largest Chamber of Commerce in the world. Let's go." The telegram was signed by Secretary Bunn.

PAGETT EXPLAINS RELATION OF LEGION TO OTHER ACTIVITIES

Chairman Says Constitution Makes It Nonpartisan, Nonpolitical and Nonsectarian.

Charles E. Pagett, chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the St. Louis American Legion, yesterday sent the Post-Dispatch the following letter concerning the relation of the legion to various activities: "My attention has been directed to an item appearing in your paper in which it was stated that the American Legion was behind the effort to build a community house for the Rev. Father Kennedy (pastor of St. Philip Neri's Catholic Church). Without wishing to detract in any way from the merit of this undertaking, or from the sterling character of the Rev. Father Kennedy, the American Legion in St. Louis wishes to correct this impression."

"The constitution of the American Legion expressly stipulates that it must at all times be nonpartisan, nonpolitical and nonsectarian, and consequently appreciate the fact that it is not possible for the American Legion as a unit to conduct a campaign of this nature."

MAN TO SUE POLICE ON ASSAULT CHARGE

Thomas McAtee to Ask for $20,000 From Members of East St. Louis Force.

Alexander Flannigan of East St. Louis, attorney for Thomas McAtee, 35 years old, a patient in the St. Louis City Hospital suffering from injuries which, he says, were inflicted Wednesday evening by East St. Louis detectives in an effort to make him confess to a robbery he was suspected of having committed. McAtee, a Post-Dispatch reporter last evening that he will file suit tomorrow in the Circuit Court at Belleville in behalf of McAtee against members of the police department for $20,000 for assault.

Flannigan declined to say who the defendants would be. "I may sue only the three men who committed the assault, or I may include the chiefs of the police and detective departments," he said.

Flannigan also said that he will endeavor to have the grand jury consider the case at the special session starting tomorrow. If it is impossible to have this grand jury take cognizance of the case, he said, he will await the convening of the next grand jury.

He said a suit in behalf of McAtee will also be filed against the responsible member of the police department who refused to permit Mrs. McAtee or Flannigan to see the prisoner when they sought to talk to him Thanksgiving Day.

Suspected of Clothing Theft. McAtee stated at the City Hospital that he was rooming at 411A Mississippi avenue, East St. Louis, and was suspected of having stolen clothing from a room in the building. He was arrested, and during the questioning admitted that he had served penitentiary sentences on two occasions for burglary.

McAtee said that Wednesday evening a negro and a white man, in plain clothes, took him to his cell to an upstairs room. One of the white men sat at a table and questioned him, while the other white man stood in front and struck him when his answers were not satisfactory. He said the questioning and abuse continued about three hours. After his face and head had been severely beaten, he said, he was laid on the table, his hands were tied, and while the negro held his legs under the table, one of the white men held his hands, which were handcuffed, and the large white man bent him with a piece of rubber hose until his back was a mass of cuts and bruises.

Says Paper Was Given Him. Thursday evening, he said, a doctor, a nurse and a white man, after having given him treatment, after which he was told to sign a paper, which proved to be a plea of guilty to a charge of vagrancy, whereupon he was given hours to leave the city. He said that about midnight Thursday he was placed in an auto, in which were two men, and brought to St. Louis via the bridge. He said he was put out of the auto at Nineteenth and Market streets and advised to remain in a hotel for a few days in order to avoid arrest should St. Louis detectives find him. He staggered to the Madison Hotel and asked the manager to have him sent to a hospital.

Chief of Police Mulconery, Chief of Detectives Neill, Detective McFarland and others at police headquarters deny knowledge of the affair. The chiefs say they will investigate that if such an affair happened it was without their knowledge, or consent, and that they will not tolerate such practices.

COUNTY PROSECUTOR ADMITS STATE LACKS PROOF OF MURDER

He Is Put on Stand at Milan, Mo., as Witness for Mother and Son Accused in Man's Death.

MILAN, Mo., Nov. 27.—A unique situation was created today at the preliminary hearing of Mrs. Daisy McClaeskey and her 17-year-old son, Fred, charged with the murder of Albert I. McClaeskey, husband and father, when A. G. Knight, counsel for the defense, placed J. P. Painter, County Prosecutor, on the stand as a witness for the defense.

Painter acknowledged, in response to questions, that he does not possess any tangible evidence connecting Mrs. McClaeskey and her son with the murder. The moveover with which McClaeskey was shot to death early the morning of Nov. 12 has not been found, he admitted, and his investigation of the case, he testified, has disclosed no only circumstantial facts. One of the witnesses on the stand testified he had found the heel of a man's shoe in the McClaeskey yard the morning of the murder.

"What did you do with it?" Knight asked. "I gave it to Mr. Painter," the witness replied. "Have you got that heel?" Knight asked, turning to J. W. Clapp, special prosecutor in the case. Clapp drew the heel from his coat pocket and tossed it carelessly on the table.

LOUISIANA AMONG OBJECTORS TO DRAFT RELEASED

Oral James, Protege of Ger Baldwin, Was Under 20-Year Sentence.

Oral James, 26 years old, of the Windsor Hotel, 3739 or place, a conscientious objector who refused to do military after he was drafted in the 4th Ward here, and who was released from the War Barracks at Fort Douglas, Colo. last Tuesday by Sec. of War Baker.

It is recalled that James was in 1917 to work for a paper in New York. Ex. his attitude regarding the draft, James wrote a letter to the Draft Board, in which he refused to recognize any Government's right to tell him when to go out and kill my fellow humans. This cause I consider a liberty of a man's conscience, and I am willing to lay down my life for it.

James was one of the last of 600 objectors to be released, following the six cases disposed of by the court. James' case was considered on the principle of conscientious objection to military service, and the sentence was commuted to a 20-year term. The major part of James' sentence was in confinement for two years, and those discharged were the men who did not do any sort of work while in military service.

James was one of those who refused the draft to accept a 20-year term for military service, and to yield to the authority of any kind. He is now shortly after Baldwin's death and joined his guardian in New York.

Overcoming Man Found Dead.

Here is the fashion in which a room can be converted into an efficiency apartment raised to the nth power. P. L. Climini has invented a revolving cylinder, that can be fitted in a species of cabinet into the side of a room, that will successfully transform the chamber into a bedroom, kitchenette, dressing-room and library or sitting-room. The bed, as shown in the picture, lets down as in the ordinary efficiency room. The water connections for the kitchenette are presumably made in the pivotal portion of the cabinet. The wardrobe and library adjuncts, of course, are simply other partitions of the cylinder. The cylinder itself is ventilated and can aid in ventilating the room.

Made entirely of steel

A new vacuum bottle

for automobiling—for the home—for the office

DURING the past fifty years vacuum bottles have been so improved that their use has become almost universal. But the danger of breaking them has always remained a constant source of worry and inconvenience to millions of their users.

In 1915 William Stanley discovered a process by which a vacuum bottle could be made entirely of steel.

Today the all-steel Stanley Vacuum Bottle is ready for you at your dealer's.

Drop it from an automobile—drop it from the table—or let it fall full-force on a rock—fill it suddenly with boiling water—you cannot break the new Stanley Vacuum Bottle. It is made entirely of steel.

Naturally the Stanley is more expensive than the ordinary vacuum bottle, but there are no expenses for repairs or replacements. With the Stanley the first cost is the last cost.

Every Stanley Bottle is lined with blue Amalite, a pure mineral coating which is fused into the steel—making a surface like porcelain.

Sold in one and two-quart sizes at all the better stores. An attractive Christmas gift. Prices (East of the Rocky Mountains), black standard finish: Quart size, $10.00—two-quart size, $15.00.

By RING W. LARDNER.

TO THE EDITOR:
I promised the boys and girls in this col. last wk. that I would try and give you a model sample short story in this wks. letter so as some of my readers that is interested in short story writing can study the form and style and technics and etc. of same so as to get a idear of how to go at writing a short story and when once a person gets the hang of it they's nothing to prevent them from cleaning up a bbl. of money writing short storys in spare time.

Of course they's a whole lot of different kinds of a short story like for inst. a ghost story or a detective story or a misery story and etc. but the kind that the editors and their clients eats up is a love story that boarders on the risky, you might say, but not to raw and the plot don't halt to amt. to so much as long as the lines is snappy and the idear is original like for inst. a man and a girl being throwed together on a desert island or something.

In the folling sample short story witch I have tore off in spare time you will notice the folling pts. witch is nessary to write a successful short story viz.: (1) a snappy title (2) the readers int. is gripped at the start (3) the dialect is racey (4) the scenes is layed in a unusual place and (5) the results is a big surprise.

In regards to the style I have tried to not write my best so as to not discourage prospected pupils that might say to themself, "What is the use we can't never write like he," but still and all I have wrote in a style witch new beginners will find it worth their wile to try and write like it and I ask 1 and all to not give up if they don't seem to get on to the rack at 1st. as it took me a cople mos. to master same and is libel to take most people yrs.

He hadn't never expected to find her there. An contrairie he had left the City to get away from the likes of she. But there she was, by golly, hopping from branch to branch of the trees that was in the woods witch he had long called his own private forest.

"A Squirrel Woman!" he husked to himself, and indeed her features was a ringer for the furry little reptile that lives off of nuts.

"Listen!" he yodelled, and the girl seeing him for the 1st. time showed her squirrel teeth in a leer.

"Listen yourself you big bum," came the reply, and the Squirrel Woman lept to the ground like a born leper. "I suppose you are hungry," she bayed. "Men usually do."

Arnold Wisecracker was much amused, for that was our hero's name.

For a wk. they lived in adjoining whiffle trees, the well groomed New Yorker and the Lady of Squirrels.

Her and Wisecracker was walking down the Avenue du Tom et Jerry.

One day wile they was setting on a root eating their breakfast of whiffle cones the girl noticed that Wisecracker was squawking.

"What is the idear, dear?" she flang at him. "Don't you like my trees?"

"Your limbs are pretty," came the reply.

"Leave," she barked, and he took a bough.

One night that autumn they was swaping confidants. The Squirrel Woman told him how she had came to leave civil life, how they had been rodent blood in her veins on the mothers side and how she had not been able to live with other people on acct. of them suspecting her for a rat and went after her with traps and poison.

"Don't die in the house," they had implored her times without No.

"Now tell me about yourself," she smacked him.

"don't you never miss our forest?"

The Squirrel Woman broke into a trot.

"Without our forest," came the reply, "I feel like water off a duck's back."

The next day found them amongst the Boys du Bologne eating sausage.

By golly, they were both sick on the trip back across the old pond. On the 4th day out they seen each other on deck for the 1st. time.

"How do you feel?" Wisecracker asked her. "You look rotten."

"And vice versa," came the reply. "I felt pretty good till I seen you. You make me sick."

"You make me sick yourself," said Wisecracker.

The stars looked down on them and laughed outright.

It's An Ill Wind, Etc.—

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

AS MR. PLAUTUS or Dr. Marcus Aurelius or Col. William J. Bryan once observed, one man's filet mignon is another man's eya-nide of potassium. Also, as Euclid tells us (we are sure of our authority this time), the converse is also true.

The Volstead act has been bad for the bartender, and is execrated by the gentlemen who once knew the exact height of the brass rail, but it is putting snappy clothes and advanced ties on the boys who used to sit in front of the livery stable and wish there was some way to make a living without working for it.

Look at Jake, for example. For 10 years Jake had no trade or profession but that of husband to an energetic laundress. After five years of wedded life, Jake's fondness for ease got on the nerves of the lady and she became a niggardly paymaster.

Jake got a quarter for delivering the wash. Also he got his board.

His taste for raiment, as prices advanced, could no longer be indulged. By and by he fell into a sort of coma, and stopped manicuring his finger nails. He dressed in bunned or borrowed clothes, and became difficult to look at.

But all that is changed. Jake is appareled as the lilies of the field. He has at least three hats, all of them snappy. Seldom does he appear twice in the same necktie. If he were allowed on Main street in his new winter overcoat he would block traffic.

And all because the eighteenth amendment introduced by Mr. Volstead, member of Congress from Minnesota, was passed by Senate and House and ratified by the legislators of three-quarters of the United States of America.

In the daytime Jake may be found in front of the livery stable, where he meets clients, by appointment.

At dewy eve he hurries away in a new silver to parts unknown.

Through the night he makes deliveries, previously arranged for. For these deliveries he gets from $15 to $25 a quart, according not to the quality of the quarts, but to the necessities of his customers.

Where he gets it is his secret. But get it he does, and it is not homemade liquor, either. It is all corked and sealed and labeled and bonded, and, judging by what happens in the cozy little homes of our village, it does the work as well as it ever did. A little better—for there is something about one's fireside—some homey quality that makes the boys linger longer than they used to when George's place had the electric light out in front and the gleaming glass on the back bar.

I sometimes think that the police suspect that all is not right with Jake and three or four of the younger married set who can be seen by appointment in the afternoons.

But if they have followed him by night they have never caught him. Neither have they apprehended any of his fellow merchants.

The drinking classes in our village no longer take trips to Canada whenever they are nervously exhausted. They don't need to. Jake and the others save them the trouble.

The boys that used to run the places along Main street, where commuters, homing on the 6:03, were frequently detained on business in the old days, have all of them gone into other lines of endeavor.

Some of them are grocers. Others are capitalists. One has become a butler, and a good one.

Purchasers of Secondhand Clothing Always Buy Solely for Use of "Relatives"

Curious psychology of customers in a store dealing in used garments seems to prevent them from admitting articles are for their own wear—Velvet gown is bought for mother, down in the country, to use in farm work—Business is now highly systematized

By MARGUERITE MARTYN.

THE high cost of clothing the last two years has given rise to a business that flourishes amazingly, despite the fact that rarely is it advertised by its patrons. Not that there is anything sinister or illegitimate about the business nor any real cause for shame in patronizing it, but because—well, because nobody wants to admit he is wearing second-hand clothes.

People may join an overall movement while it is a fad; some will follow a leader of fashion who sets an example by wearing old clothes, all of us will rail at the cost of living, but where is the individual, man or woman, who will willingly admit he is wearing somebody else's castoff clothing? Not even for the joy of outwitting the profiteers will we do that.

Judging by the amount of business done by this particular shop, however—judging by its location, far from the rummage sale and usual secondhand store neighborhoods, judging by the class of some of the merchandise handled, judging by the types of some of the customers to be encountered there, if you can encounter them before they dodge discovery—not your next-door neighbor, not your office neighbor at the next desk, not your seatmate in the street car, not your vis-a-vis at the luncheon table, not anybody to be met in these everyday walks of life, is safe from the suspicion of wearing secondhand clothes.

Any day you may meet that well-known and much lamented suit your wife, overly tempted, sold at the back door, being worn by one of your contemporaries in your own little world. For all kind of people patronize this particular merchant, albeit furtively, most times, and all kinds of clothes are distributed from this shop.

Here are garments which candidly have seen better days, others that merely have offended some capricious taste. Others to which an accident of moth or tear or burn has befallen; some that have hung in spacious old-time attics for years, until an unusually persistent or far-faring back-door tradesmen lured them forth. Here are garments so full of character you could, from what they reveal, reconstruct the history of their former wearers.

Others, pathetic relics of fleeting fads, passed up by fashion, before they had begun to serve their usefulness. Peg-top trousers and gored skirts! And again, garments so slightly worn that they are an added reflection of the spirit of the times that makes profiteers and waste upon the one hand, and meager living, old-clothes wearers on the other. Then there are large quantities of garments that reveal how many persons take advantage of the mail-order houses' offers of "Your money back if you are not satisfied," and what becomes of travelworn and shopworn, but otherwise unworn, garments.

All kinds of people patronize this old clothes store.

He said he wanted it for a hunting coat.

It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, but sometimes it takes a genius to turn evil into good, and the person who has turned the high cost of clothing to good account on his own behalf and on behalf of many suffering under the well-known economic pressure, is a sort of a genius at organization. He has practically all the back-door clothing tradesmen in the city working for him.

His business occupies an old, commodious, three-story residence on Washington avenue. His stock crams not merely the three floors, but intervening floors built in half way up the high-ceilinged rooms, balcony fashion, the garments hung just as closely together as they can be on individual hangers.

The stock is as systematically sorted and arranged and attractively displayed as in a department store. Each garment has been steam pressed, renovated, mended until it looks as well as it can be made to look. Thirty persons are employed in the building, selling, keeping stock, mending, repairing and altering to order. Every garment has been fumigated, and, if necessary, chemically cleaned, before it is brought to the salesroom.

The types of customers are no less varied and assorted than the garments themselves, but there is one characteristic the shopkeeper says a large class of his customers possess in common. That is a hesitancy to acknowledge or let it be suspected, even while they are rapaciously grabbing at the bargains offered, that they are buying the castoffs for their own use.

Dealing gently with this peculiar quirk of character, hastily catalogued as false pride—a quirk especially peculiar to the American character, it seems—employs not the least of this tradesman's talents. Small but alluring advertisements in the daily papers phrased as follows—

CLOAKS, $1.50.

Wool, silk lined; bought from some of the swellest homes.

LADIES' SUITS, $3.50.

WOOL DRESSES, $3.50.

RAINCOATS, $2.50.

OVERCOATS, SUITS, $5.

COAT AND VEST, $2.

4000 MEN'S AND BOYS', LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

WE CLOSE AT 8 P. M.

overrides this instinct, as strong as Americanism and no stronger. But once inside the old clothes emporium, notwithstanding the orderly, efficient, self-respecting aspect of the place, false pride again makes a last determined stand.

"They make all kinds of uncalled-for excuses rather than admit they are seeking an old clothes bargain for their own use," the shopkeeper will tell you. "They examine a piece of woollen cloth and exclaim that it is better material than the adulterated stuffs to be had today. They commend the revolt against extravagance that is leading others to wear secondhand clothing! But they won't acknowledge that they themselves have been forced to that expedient. The lost overcoat, that is their favorite gag. 'Somebody swiped my overcoat. I may get it back, so I don't want to buy a new one. Let's see if you have something that will fit me to tide me over this cold snap.' Processions of them, one after another, will offer this unasked-for explanation. You'd think there was some kind of a lodge of these fellows and that this explanation was a preconcerted formula. But, of course, we know just the opposite is true. These customers never discuss their purchases with one another.

"The man who just drove away in a touring car bought a fur-collared overcoat. He said he needed something to go hunting in, not having anything in his wardrobe he wished to subject to such rough usage. We showed him regulation canvas, sheepskin-lined hunting coats, in the mail order house consignment, never worn, but he selected the dressy garment, long-skirted and made of heavy black cloth—to go hunting in. Another man today went out of his way to make the elaborate explanation that he had two overcoats at his home in another city and had left another on the train and only wanted one to get home in. A man will try on suits and overcoats, saying he wants them for his own brother, who is just his size, but won't acknowledge they are for his own use. The lady who comes looking for garments to send to relations down on the farm and who buys a velvet evening coat, remarking that it will be just the thing for mother to go out milking in, is a familiar customer.

"We humor their excuses and respect their thin deceptions just as much as we do the frankness of

Putting Dolly in the Schoolroom

Education in our schools, after so long employing illustrations, dressed with historical accuracy, in their little textbooks, usually — dolls dressed for home use, often serve as fascinating pictures.

Dolls in the schoolroom. Dolls in museum display cases, at even young people's parties, are common. Dolls "dressed" in costumes for a few days at a time, just as people are dressed to meet at the public parties.

It may seem to her teachers, but the doll dressed above in being used in education in some Eastern states. The doll's position in the world which takes at least from the scientific period and a common article in the museum of ancient Egypt or India, but has not yet been in modern children's hands.

Geography, ethnology and history are some of the subjects in which dolls are of great assistance and correct costume has been found useful. But at present the doll as a kind of supplement to the picture, before the child's mind, is still rare.

Child and mother do not seem to be especially in touch with dolls. In the home, dolls are common, but in the schoolroom, they are not. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not.

The Museum of Art, in New York, for example, has a collection of dolls, including a doll dressed in a costume of the 18th century. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not.

Even looking at the dolls, the pupils are given a description of the costume of the dolls before them, something about the costume and history of the dolls, and some of the people in history or in history.

This Egyptian doll is declared by experts to be about 3500 years old. It represents a dancing girl, and once had human hair fastened to its head.

mark comes from so many small dolls. And so exactly, that museum and school authorities in several cities decided to take a chance.

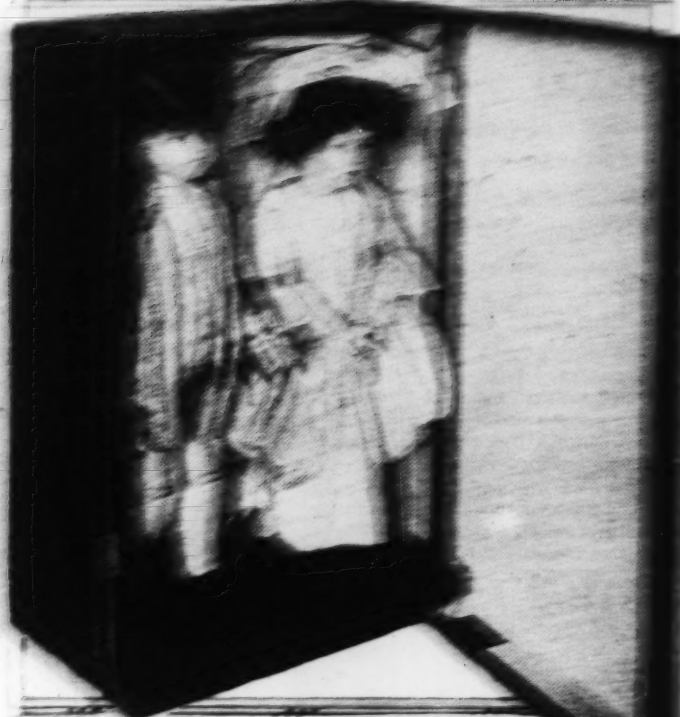

Dolls in some cases quite valuable, have been loaned to little girls upon a card system in which each child had first of all to present the signature of a guardian. Like a library book, the doll was charged against the child until returned.

At first there was some hesitancy as to the condition in which the dolls would be brought back. It was realized that even though a doll came back without the or fractures, it might have been spoiled to the point of being unusable, or even require restoration if it had been visiting a foreign quarter.

The experience showed that in almost every case excellent care was being taken of the dolls. Returned as most of them had been, and then dressed again, the dolls came home with their garments as clean as when they went away.

Some of modern costume are particularly desired by the children to whom dolls are loaned, and the reason is that they and their mothers use the small garments as patterns in their own dressing. To see what the new dress will look like when finished, even in miniature, is a big stimulus.

And most of the little girls who borrow these mu-small dolls, before entering them, duplicate the costume as far as they are able for their own use, thus saving experience in handling and dressing them. Some of the dolls, especially those of the Colonial period, are of great value, and are loaned to the public schools.

For many years, dolls have been a staple of the child's life. In the home, they are common, but in the schoolroom, they are not. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not.

Dolls are a wonderful help in school work, and are loaned to the public schools. The doll is a common article in the home, but in the schoolroom, it is not.

In the schoolroom, of course, the main appeal is to the eye. Children are given a pair of dolls in the schoolroom, and they are given a pair of dolls in the schoolroom.

Dolls in correct costume are such a help to the teacher that one wonders why they have not been used before in the schoolroom and much more widely than they are now. Elementary education is really of pattern for their appeal to the eye. And a correctly-dressed costume doll, for example, will make more of an impression on a child's mind than a dozen pictures.

Early American wooden, jointed dolls, found in attic at Springfield, Mass., and which were just saved from being burned as rubbish. They are considered very valuable.

I believe that dolls, either singly or arranged in groups, will serve more and more prominently in the work of the school.

In all countries in the world, Japan has the greatest interest in dolls, and families in quite modest circumstances may possess scores of them. The Feast of Dolls is a great festival, in early spring. The dolls, old and new, are sent about little tables, and candy and other refreshments placed on the tables, to be eaten afterwards by the dolls' owners. Usually a careful record is kept of each doll, with date and name, so that the dolls which pass from one generation to another are accompanied by a regular genealogical tree.

In Spain, when a girl is ready to marry, it is the custom for her to hang her doll in the window, to show that she is through with it, and would like to have a husband.

Dolls in ancient Egypt often had only one leg and one arm, or two arms and no legs, or two legs and no arms, sometimes all the limbs but no head. This (Continued on Page 12.)

Putting Dolly in the Schoolroom

Educators in some Eastern cities are employing mannikins, dressed with historical accuracy, to illustrate textbooks vividly — Dolls loaned for home use often serve as dressmaking patterns :: ::

DOLLS in the schoolroom. Dolls in museum display cases, or even rooms, specially set apart for them. Dolls "issued" to children for a few days at a time, just as books are loaned to them at the public library.

It may sound rather fantastic, but the plan outlined above is being used today by educators in some Eastern cities. The oldest plaything in the world, which dates at least from the neolithic period and is a common article in the contents of ancient Egyptian tombs, has been put to work in teaching children their lessons.

Geography, ethnology and history are some of the obvious subjects in which mannikins of proper construction and correct costume have been found useful. But advocates of the doll as a kind of supplement to the textbook declare that its possibilities go still further.

Child and mother alike (this applies especially to foreign-born families in the lower social scale) receive from such study helpful lessons about personal appearance, say these advocates. The mother gets new ideas about making clothes, and both she and the child see how much is added to one's appearance by cleanliness and neat arrangement of dress.

This Egyptian doll is declared by savants to be about 5500 years old. It represents a dancing girl, and once had human hair fastened to its head.

mark comes from so many small girls, and so earnestly, that museum and school authorities in several cities decided to take a chance.

Dolls, in some cases quite valuable, have been issued to little girls upon a card system in which each child had first of all to present the signature of a guarantor. Like a library book, the doll was charged against the child until returned.

At first there was some uneasiness as to the condition in which the dolls would be brought back. It was realized that even though a doll came back without rips or fractures, it might have been fondled to the point of dinginess, or even require fumigation if it had been visiting a foreign quarter.

But experience showed that in almost every case excellent care was being taken of the dolls. Stripped as most of them had been, and then dressed again, the dolls came home with their garments as clean as when they went away.

Dolls of modern costume are particularly desired by the children to whom dolls are issued, and the reason is that they and their mothers use the small garments as patterns in their own dressmaking. To see what the new dress will look like when finished, even in miniature, is a big stimulus.

And most of the little girls who borrow these museum dolls, before returning them, duplicate the costume as far as they are able for their own dolls, thus getting experience in needlework and dressmaking while at play. Some of the doll wardrobes thus produced are surprisingly good, according to J. C. Ruben of New York, who was in St. Louis recently.

For many years, dolls have been a hobby with Ruben, and he is an active worker for the establishment of children's museums, such as have proven successful in the East. Ruben's special interest is in the doll section of such museums, and where a museum is not possible, he urges that a circulating collection of dolls be started, at least.

"Dolls are a wonderful help in school work," said Ruben. "Until you have gone into the matter you can't realize what a vast field will be covered in the study of dolls. You will meet with very curious and interesting facts."

"In the schoolroom, of course, the main appeal is to the eyes. Children inspecting a pair of dolls in Colonial costume get a much better idea of how Americans looked before the Revolution than they could from any description read to them, however vivid. Copper-complexioned dolls in Indian costume make the Indians seem very real to them. It is the same with all other races and periods."

"Dolls in correct costumes are such a help to the teacher that one wonders why they have not been used before in the schoolroom and much more widely than they are now. Elementary textbooks use plenty of pictures, for their appeal to the eye. And a correctly-dressed costume doll, for example, will make more of an impression on a child's mind than a dozen pictures."

Early American wooden, jointed dolls, found in attic at Springfield, Mass., and which were just saved from being burned as rubbish. They are considered very valuable.

"I believe that dolls, either singly or arranged in groups, will figure more and more prominently in the work of the schools."

The pioneer was the Children's Museum of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, which had a modest beginning almost 20 years ago. Among those established later were the Children's Museum of Boston, which met with such a response from the youngsters that two branches already have been started, and the Newark Museum Association. A children's museum was established recently at Seattle, and Cambridge, Mass., is making plans for a similar institution. Many of the older museums have collections of dolls, some quite extensive and valued at many thousands of dollars.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, for example, has a notable collection of dolls, and the Pennsylvania Museum at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, contains another. In the latter museum is displayed the greater part of a doll collection valued at $75,000, which was gathered by Mrs. T. Magaree Wright, a Philadelphia society woman. Dolls which formerly belong to Queen Victoria and to Empress Eugenie are in this collection.

In the Children's Museum of Boston may be seen a doll to which Henry Wadsworth Longfellow wrote an ode. In the literature of Toyland there have been many poems about dolls, but as far as Ruben knows this was the only case of a real poet writing a poem to a real doll. A card in the showcase tells the curious that the doll's name was (or is) Florella.

The Kensington Museum, London, ranks among its treasures the family of 135 beautifully dressed dolls which once belonged to Queen Victoria, and 32 of which the Queen herself dressed when a child.

Two of the smallest dolls in the world are in the Metropolitan Museum, and, in fact, they are declared to be unique. Presented in 1830 to a little girl who gave them to the museum 80 years later, one doll is just an inch long and the other is one and one-half inches. The heads and bodies are of bisque. The mannikins are clad in beautiful pink dresses, trimmed with black velvet, and wigs are affixed to the heads. The figures are believed to be of American workmanship. The clothing is undoubtedly of American make, and reflects the styles of about 1825 to 1830.

Of all countries in the world, Japan pays the greatest respect to dolls, and families in quite moderate circumstances may possess scores of them. The Feast of Dolls is a great festival, in early spring. The dolls, old and new, are seated about little tables, and candy and other refreshments placed on the tables, to be eaten afterwards by the dolls' owners. Usually a careful record is kept of each doll, with dates and names, so that the dolls which pass from one generation to another are accompanied by a regular genealogical tree.

In Syria, when a girl is ready to marry, it is the custom for her to hang her doll in the window, to show that she is through with it, and would like to have suitors.

BEST STORIES TOLD BY AVIATORS AFTER MAKING HISTORIC FLIGHT TO ALASKA

Lieut. Clifford C. Nutt describes how the party passed from modern civilization to absolute wilderness literally overnight, landing in towns where the residents seemed to have stepped from the pages of London or Bret Harte and finally reached regions where the hands of time seemed turned back for years :: ::

LITTLE more than 150 years ago, a young surveyor, George Washington by name, spent several years laboriously plotting out a canal near what is now our national capital and another near Norfolk, Va. His biographers tell of the difficulty in traversing the country because some of it was still covered with virgin forest.

Recently, four army airplanes completed a 9000-mile trip from New York to Nome and return, and, although the photographic survey from the air was hampered by bad weather, the results were enough to show that an aerial survey of much of the route could be made in about 10 flying hours. This was the portion that lay over complete wilderness, and it is said that a land survey, even by a series of parties, would take at least three years.

This tremendous saving in time is but one of the results discovered from the pioneering feat of the army air service. The four DH-4 planes which set out on the journey returned to Mitchel Field on the afternoon of Oct. 20, still using their original motors.

Not only did the flight furnish a valuable test of the capacity of the planes, but it laid out a route over which mail can be transported in relays by airplanes; it showed the feasibility of making a photographic survey of 3500 square miles of practically unexplored territory and it has already given a general idea of a route that can be cut to bring residents of Alaska closer in touch with the people of the United States.

Technical details of the flight have already been told. But what most appeals to the imagination of the reader is the study of absolute contrasts that was enjoyed by the officers who took part in the trip.

These men stepped from modern civilization into the wilderness. They left the teeming streets of New York for regions that had never before been explored. They passed from the company of skilled scientists into association with characters who could have stepped from the pages of Jack London or Bret Harte. And this without any intervening time, to dull the impressions of the scene just left.

For quickness of change, as in a dream, and for sheer study of contrasts, these aviators stepped from scenes of the highest civilization to primeval conditions overnight.

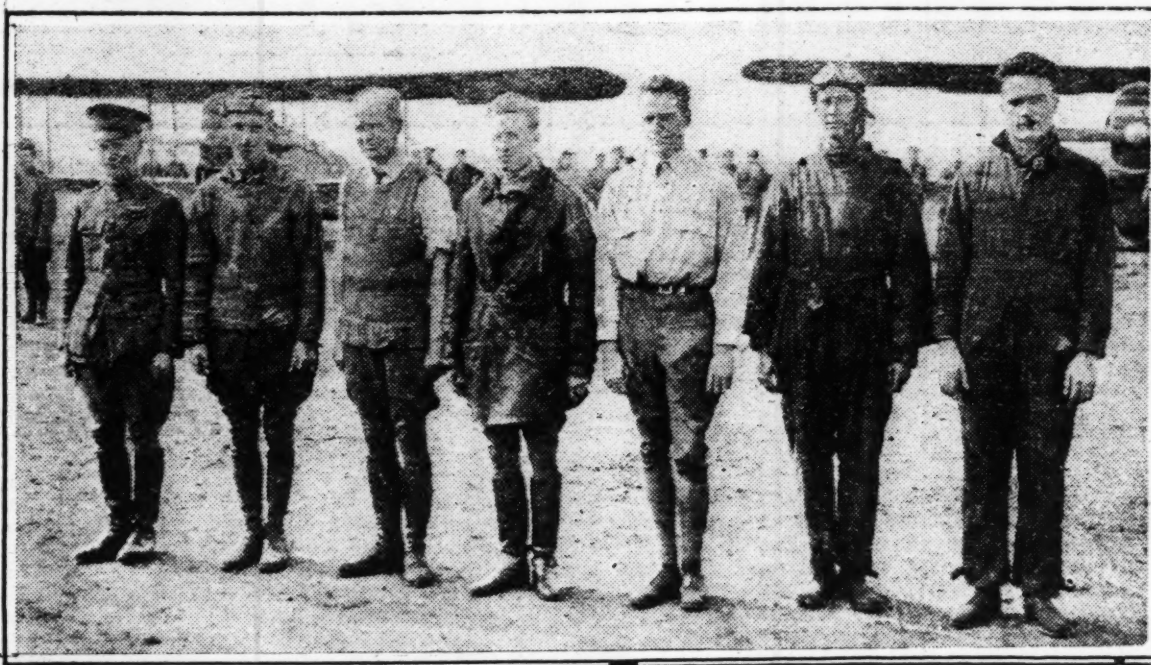

Pioneers who have laid out railroads have never gone directly into virgin territory. The route has always been mapped out for them by surveyors, and they, in turn, have usually followed some accepted caravan route or the course of some stream that is known as a waterway.

But the pioneers on this aerial flight went over country that had never before been explored. The drone of their motors was heard in regions where the whistle of the locomotive has never sounded and their passage through the air was viewed with awe and wonder by native tribes near the Arctic Circle who have never seen a steamboat, much less a train.

Stories told by the travelers of the wild game they have seen appeal most strongly to sportsmen. Mighty hunters, like Roosevelt, who enjoyed seeing wild game at large, would have appreciated this trip to the full. Mountain sheep and goats were seen on the sides of precipitous mountains where they never could have been perceived by a voyager on foot. At various points along the route, herds of reindeer were seen. Caribou and other wild animals of the barren lands were seen and in the Bering Sea the party passed over a vast colony of long-haired seals and a number of white whales.

One black bear and about 100 wild ducks furnished the entire bag of the party, so far as wild game was concerned. But this was sufficient to provide them all with fresh meat whenever it was so desired.

Lieut. Clifford C. Nutt, who was in plane No. 2, told of the game to be seen on the approach to Dawson.

"The principal meat supply of the region is the wild game, chiefly moose and caribou," he said, "and we were there about the time of the annual caribou runs, as they are called. The caribou usually start on this migration in autumn. They bunch together under the leadership of one animal and the combined herds sometimes run to 200,000. Then they start on a tour, exactly where, no one has been able to discover. The migration undoubtedly has something to do with their food supply and probably leads from some part of the Arctic regions, where the mosses are frozen too solidly in winter, to some other region where the tundras are not subject to such intense cold. Hunters profit by this custom of the animals and take up their stand along the route of the migration. Nothing turns the animals aside, and the sound of a shot simply causes a little flurry in the vast procession. The fattest bucks are picked out for the larder and nature provides all the cold storage needful in that climate.

"Some of our landing places were in primeval wildernesses. After leaving Edmonton, Canada, we landed in Jasper Park, one of the Canadian national parks. Provision had been made for us here, tents had been put up and a Chinese cook had supper ready for us and we were extended every courtesy. We decided to take a bath, but were told that the water in the Athabasca River was too cold. A little lake about one-half mile away was recommended as a better place. When I stuck my foot in the lake, however, the temperature felt just above freezing. We literally had to slide into the water, however, as the mosquitoes were attracted in vast clouds by our presence. Their number and ferocity was almost beyond belief. They often block land travel through certain sections and although we built smudges around our tents and kept the bonfires going all night, we got little rest. We made an early start next morning.

"We made our next stop at Prince George. Capt. Street's machine caught fire soon after the hop-off at Jasper, owing to his oil tank being too full. Some of the oil ran down an exhaust pipe and ignited. Henriques, who was driving, put the plane into a side slip and was going to land in the river, but the change in the position of the machine stopped the flow of oil and the fire extinguished itself. We got into Prince George ahead of Street, but he arrived that night. We lighted flares to guide him, but it was impossible to estimate his landing exactly in the dark, and he overshot, rolling with great speed out of the inclosure, where a stump took off about four feet from the end of his left wing. It would have taken a long time to get another wing from Sacramento, so we got a big Swede carpenter to frame up the wing and poled our available supply of spare linen that we carried for patching. Lieut. Kirkpatrick, the only chemist with the outfit, tried to prepare dope to treat it from cellulose nitrate, unrefined banana oil and anil acetate, but the linen was about as flabby when it dried as it was before.

"While at Prince George we had our first experience with miners of the genuine, hard-boiled type. These lumberjacks were sometimes tall Scotchmen and sometimes little French Canadians. They all came to the town. We could have chosen characters that stepped from the pages of novels by Jack London. At other points, in the regions which more closely resembled the country described by Bret Harte, we ran across men who might have figured in his "Tales of the Argonauts." Finally, the views of wild game that we saw reminded us of the stories written by Roosevelt about conditions that once existed. Some of the country was not so unlike the Bad Lands of the Dakotas, where he did much of his hunting.

"Then from Whitehorse to Dawson we flew along routes that were patrolled by the mounted police. These men have figured so often in novels and stories that they are familiar to all readers of fiction. They are also familiar to the criminal element in Canada and are greatly dreaded by lawbreakers. In spite of their limited numbers, they have been able to put down lawlessness over a vast territory and to have the mounted police put on the trail of a criminal usually means that he is sure to be caught sooner or later.

"On the trail between Dawson and Whitehorse, the neat little houses, painted red, which mark the stations of the police, are placed about each 40 or 50 miles. Below us we could often see little parties of the police riding along—snappy looking fellows, in bright red jackets and blue trousers. They were of tremendous assistance to us, wherever we encountered them.

"An interesting experience was when we passed over the Coast Range Mountains near Wrangell. We had found the range plotted at 7000 feet on our maps, but they seemed to grow in height as we approached. When we reached 7000 feet, we had to go at least 300 feet higher, and then, instead of finding ourselves above a regular range, with valleys between the rows of hills, we discovered that the peaks were closely filled between with ice and snow. These glaciers looked like dark green seas. So totally unexpected was this thing of finding valleys filled to the top with glaciers that the possibility of fossil discoveries under the ice in the region seem very great.

"At Wrangell, the only landing field available was in the Stikine River, where a little island was supposed to show above the water. When we landed, however, it had about six inches of water on it, and this rose to about one foot in height before we left. We crossed Lake La Barge, well known to readers of Servé's poems. We arrived at Dawson on Discovery Day, Aug. 17. This is a gala day in that region, and the people from all the countryside had come to town. We were made welcome to all the festivities.

"On the way to Fairbanks we found the trail cut by Gen. William Mitchell of the air service some 20 years ago. He was making a survey at the time for the route of a telephone line to connect with a cable to Siberia. This project was later abandoned.

"At Ruby we landed on a sandbar, which appeared

Running Elk

By REX BEACH

UP FROM the valley below came the throb of war drums, the faint rattle of shots, and the distant cries of painted horsemen charging. From my vantage point on the ridge I had an unobstructed view of the encampment, a great circle of tipis and tents three miles in circumference, cradled in a sag of the timberless hills. The sounds came softly through the still Dakota air, and my eye took in every sharp-drawn detail of the scene—ponies grazing along the creek bottom, children playing beneath the blue smoke of camp fires, the dense crowd ringed about a medicine pole in their center, intent on a war dance.

Five thousand Sioux were here in all their martial splendor. They were painted and decked and trapped for war, living again their days of plenty, telling anew their tales of might, and repeating on a mimic scale their greatest battles. Five days the feasting had continued; five mornings I had been awakened at dawn to see a thousand ochered, feathered horsemen come thundering down upon the camp, their horses running flat, their rifles popping, while the valley rocked to their battle cries and to the answering clamor of the army which rode forth to meet them. Five sultry days had I spent wandering unnoticed, ungreeted and disdained, an alien in a hostile land, tolerated but unwelcome. Five evenings had I witnessed the tents begin to glow and the camp fires kindle until the valley became hooped about as if by a million giant fireflies. Five nights had I strayed, like a lost soul, through an unreal wilderness, harping to the drone of stories told in an unfamiliar tongue, to the minor-keyed dirges of an unknown race, to the thumping of countless moccasined feet in the measures of queer dances. The odors of a savage people had begun to pall on me, and the sound of a strange language to annoy; I longed for another white man, for a word in my own tongue.

It was the annual "give-away" celebration, when all the tribe assembles to make presents, to race, to tell stories, and to recount the legends of their prowess. They had come from all quarters of the reservation, bringing their trunks, their children and their dogs. Of the last named more had come, by far, than would go back, for this was a week of feasting, and every day the air was heavy with the smell of singeing hair, and the cubs that had been spared gnawed at an ever-increasing pile of bones.

I had seen old hags strangle dogs by pulling on opposite ends of a slipnoose, or choke them by laying a tent pole on their throats and standing on the ends; I had seen others knock them down with billets of wood, drag them kicking to the fires, and then knock them down again when they crawled out of the flames. All in all, I had acquired much information regarding the carnival appetites of the noble red man, learning that he is poetic only in the abstract.

It was drawing on toward sunset, so I slipped into my camera strap and descended the slope. I paused, however, while still some distance away from my tent, for next to it another had been erected during my absence. It was a tiny affair, with a rug in front of it, and upon the rug stood a steamer chair.

"Hello, inside!" I shouted, then ran forward, straddling papooses and shouldering squaws out of my way.

"Hello!" came an answer, and out through the flap was thrust the head of my friend, the Government doctor.

"Gee! I'm glad to see you!" I said, as I shook his hand. "I'm as lonesome as a deaf mute at a song recital."

"I figured you would be," said the doctor, "so I came out to see the finish of the feast and to visit with you. I brought some bread from the agency."

"Hoorah! White bread and white conversation! I'm hungry for both."

"What's the matter? Won't Indians talk to you?"

"I guess they would if they could, but they can't. I haven't found one among the whole 5000 who can understand a word I say. Your Government schools have gone back in the betting with me, Doc. You must keep your graduates under lock and key."

"They can all speak English if they want to—that is, the younger ones. Some few of the old people are too proud to try, but the others can talk as well as we can, until they forget."

"Do you mean to say these people have been fooling me? I don't believe it," said I. "There's one that can't talk English, and I'll make a bet on it." I indicated a passing brave with an eagle feather headdress which reached far down his naked legs. He was a magnificent animal; he was young and lithe, and as tall and straight as a sapling. "I've tried him twice, and he simply doesn't understand."

My friend called to the warrior: "Hey, Tom! Come here a minute." The Indian came, and the doctor continued: "When do you hold the horse races, Thomas?"

"Tomorrow, at 4 o'clock, unless it rains," said the fellow. He spoke in an odd, halting dialect, but his words were perfectly understandable.

"Are you going to ride?"

"No; my race horse is sick."

As the ocher-daubed figure vanished into the dusk the old man turned to me, saying: "College man."

"What?"

"Yes. B. A. He's a graduate."

"Impossible!" I declared. "Why, he talks like a foreigner, or as if he were just learning our language."

"Exactly. In another three years he'll be an Indian again, through and through. Oh, the reservation is full of fellows like Tom." The doctor heaved a sigh of genuine disappointment. "It's a melancholy acknowledgment to make, but our work seems to count for almost nothing. It's their blood."

"Perhaps they forget the higher education," said I; "but how about the agency school, where you teach them to farm and to sew and to cook, as well as to read and to write? Surely they don't forget that?"

"I've heard a graduating class read theses, sing cantatas and deliver sounding orations; then I've seen those same young fellows, three months later, squatting in tipis and eating with their fingers. It's a common thing for our 'sweet girl graduates' to lay off their white commencement-day dresses, their high-heeled shoes and pretty hats, for the shawl and the moccasins. We teach them to make sponge cake and to eat with a fork, but they prefer dog soup and a horn spoon. Of course, there are exceptions, but most of them forget much faster than they learn."

"Our Eastern ideas of Mr. Lo are somewhat out of line with the facts," I acknowledged. "He's sort of a hero with us. I remember several successful plays with romantic Indians in the lead."

"I know," My friend laughed shortly. "I saw some of them. If you like, however, I'll tell you how it really happens. I know a story."

When we had finished supper the doctor told me the story of Running Elk. The night was heavy with unusual odors and burdened by weird music; the whisper of a lively multitude came to us, punctuated at intervals by distant shouts or shots or laughter. On either hand the camp fires stretched away like twinkling stars, converging steadily until the horns joined each other away out yonder in the darkness. It was a suitable setting for an epic tale of the Sioux.

"I've Tried Him Twice, and He Simply Doesn't Understand."

"I've grown gray in this service," the old man began, "and the longer I live the less time I waste in trying to understand the difference between the Indian race and ours. I've about reached the conclusion that it's due to some subtle chemical ingredient in the blood. One race is lively and progressive, the other is sluggish and atavistic. The white man is ever developing, he's always advancing, always expanding; the red man is marking time or walking backward. It is only a matter of time until he will vanish utterly. He's different from the negro. The negro enlarges, up to a certain limit, then he stops. Some people claim, I believe, that his skull is sutured in such a manner as to check his brain development when his bones finally harden and set. The idea sounds reasonable; if true, there will never be a serious conflict between the blacks and the whites. But the red man differs from both. To begin with, his is not a subject race by birth. Physically, he is as perfect as either; nature has endowed him with an intellect quite as keen as the white man's, and with an open articulation of the skull which permits the growth of his brain. Somewhere, nevertheless, she has cunningly concealed a flaw, a flaw which I have labored 30 years to find."

"I have a theory—you know, all old men have theories—that it is a physical thing, as tangible as that osseous constriction of the cranium which holds the negro in subjection, and that if I could lay my finger on it I could raise the Indian to his ancient mastery and to a dignified place among the nations; I could change them from a vanishing people into a race of rulers, of lawgivers, of creators. At least that used to be my dream."

"Some years ago I felt that I was well on my way to success, for I found a youth who offered every promise of great manhood. I studied him until I knew his every trait and his every strength—he didn't seem to have any weaknesses. I raised him according to my own ideas; he became a tall, straight fellow, handsome as a bronze statue of a god. Physically, he was perfect, and he had a mind as fine as his body. He had the best blood of his nation in him, being the son of a war chief, and he was called Thomas Running Elk. I educated him at the agency school under my own personal supervision, and on every occasion I studied him. I spent hours in shaping his mind and in bending him away from the manners and the habits of his tribe. I taught him to think like a white man. He responded like a growing vine; he became the pride of the reservation—a reserved but an eager youth, with an understanding and wit beyond that of most white boys of his age. Search him as rigorously as I might, I couldn't find a single flaw. I believed I was about to prove my theory."

"Running Elk romped through our school, and he couldn't learn fast enough; when he had finished I sent him East to college, and, in order to wean him utterly away from the past, instead of sending him to an Indian school, I arranged for him to enter one of the big Eastern universities, where no Indian had ever been, where constant association with the flower of our race would by its own force raise him to a higher level. Well, it worked. He led his classes as a stag leads a herd. He was a silent, dignified, shadowy figure; his fellow students considered him unapproachable; nevertheless, they admired and they liked him. In all things he excelled; but he was best, perhaps, in athletics, and for this I took the credit—a Jovian satisfaction in my work."

"News of his victories on track and field and gridiron came to me regularly, for his professors were interested in my experiment. As for the boy himself, he never wrote; it was not his nature. Nor did he communicate with his people. He had cut himself off from them, and I think he looked down upon them. At intervals his father came to the agency to inquire about Running Elk, for I did not allow my protégé to return even during vacations. That was a part of my plan. At my stories of his son's victories the father made no comment; he merely listened quietly, then folded his blanket about him and slipped away. The old fellow was a good deal of a philosopher; he showed neither resentment nor pleasure, but once or twice I caught him smiling oddly at my enthusiasm. I know now what was in his mind."

"It was in Running Elk's senior year that a great thing came to him, a thing I had counted on from the start. He fell in love. A girl entered his life. But this girl didn't enter as I had expected, and when the news reached me I was completely taken aback. She was a girl I had dandled on my knees as a child, the only daughter of an old friend. Moreover, instead of Running Elk being drawn to her, as I had planned, she fell desperately in love with him.

"I guess the gods were offended at my presumption and determined by one hair's-breadth shift to destroy the balance of my whole structure. They're a jealous lot, the gods. I didn't understand, at that time, how great must have been the amusement which I offered them.

"You've heard of old Henry Harman? Yes, the railroad king. It was his daughter, Alicia. No wonder you look incredulous.

"In order to understand the story you'll have to know something about old Henry. You'll have to believe in heredity. Henry is a self-made man. He came into the Middle West as a poor boy, and by force of indomitable pluck, ability and doggedness he became a captain of industry. We were born on neighboring farms, and while I, after a lifetime of work, have won nothing except an underpaid Government job, Henry has become rich and mighty. He had that indefinable, unacquirable faculty for making money, and he became a commanding figure in the financial world. He's dominant, he's self-centered, he's one-purposed; he's a rough-hewn block of a man, and his unbounded wealth, his power and his contact with the world have never smoothed nor rounded him. He's just about the same now as when he was a section boss on his own railroad. His daughter Alicia is another Henry Harman, feminized. Her mother was a pampered child, born to ease and enslaved to her own whims. No desire of hers, however extravagant, ever went ungratified, and right up to the hour of her death old Henry never said no to her—partly out of a spirit of amusement, I dare say, and partly because she was the only unbridled extravagance he had ever yielded to in all his life. Well, having sowed the wind, he reaped the whirlwind in Alicia. She combined the distinguishing traits of both parents, and she grew up more effectively spoiled than her mother.

"When I got a panicky letter from one of Running Elk's professors coupling her name vaguely with that of my Indian, I wavered in my determination to see the experiment out; but the analyst is unsentimental, and a fellow who sets out to untangle the skein of nature must pay the price, so I waited.

"That fall I was called to Washington on department business—we were fighting for a new appropriation—and while there I went to the theater one night. I was extremely harassed, and my mind was filled with Indian matters, so I went out alone to seek an evening's relief, not caring whither my feet took me.

"The play was one of those you spoke of; it told the story of a young Indian college man in love with a white girl. Whether or not it was well written I don't know; but it seemed as if the hand of destiny had led me to it, for the hero's plight was so similar to the situation of Running Elk that it seemed almost uncanny, and I wondered if this play might afford me some solution of his difficulty.

"You will remember that the Indian in the play is a great football hero, and a sort of demi-god to his fellows. He begins to consider himself one of them—their equal—and he falls in love with the sister of his chum. But when this fact is made known his friends turn against him and try to show him the barrier of blood. At the finish a messenger comes bearing word that his father is dead and that he has been made chief in the old man's place. He is told that his people need him, and although the girl offers to go with him and make her life his, he renounces her for his duty to the tribe.

"Well, it was all right up to that point, but the end didn't help me in shaping the future of Running Elk, for his father was hale, hearty and contented, and promised to hang on in that condition as long as we gave him his allowance of beef on issue day.

"That night when I got back to the hotel I found a long-distance call from old Henry Harman. He had wired me here at the agency, and, finding I was in Washington, he had called me from New York. He didn't tell me much over the phone, except that he wanted to see me at once on a matter of importance. My work was about finished, so I took a train in the morning and went straight to his office. When I arrived I found the old fellow badly rattled. There is a certain kind of worry which comes from handling affairs of importance. Men like Henry Harman thrive upon it; but there's another kind which searches out the joints in their coats of mail and makes women of them. That's what Henry was suffering from.

"Oh, Doc, I'm in an awful hole!" he exclaimed. "You're the only man who can pull me out. It's about Alicia and that damned savage of yours."

"I knew that was it," said I.

"If you've heard about it clear out there," Harman declared, with a catch in his voice, "it's even worse than I thought." He strode up and down his office for a few moments; then he sank heavily into his chair and commenced to pound his mahogany desk, declaring angrily:

"I won't be defied by my own flesh and blood! I won't! That's all there is to it. I'm master of my own family. Why, the thing's fantastic, absurd, and yet it's terrible! Heavens! I can't believe it!"

He Remained a Fleeting, an Elusive Thing, with the Vigor of a Wild Horse.

"Have you talked with Alicia?"

"Not with her, to her. She's like a mule. I never saw such a will in a woman. I—I've fought her until I'm weak. Where she got her temper I don't know." He collapsed feebly and I was forced to smile, for there's only one thing stubborn enough to overcome a Harman's resistance, and that is a Harman's desire.

"Then it isn't a girlish whim?" I ventured.

"Whim! Look at me!" He held out his trembling hands. "She's licked me, Doc. She's going to marry that—that—" He choked and muttered unintelligibly: "I've reasoned, I've pleaded, I've commanded. She merely smiles and shrugs and says I'm probably right, in the abstract. Then she informs me that abstract problems go to pieces once in a while. She says this—this—Galloping Moose, this yelping ghost dancer of yours, is the only real man she ever met."

"What does he have to say?"

"Humph!" grunted Harman. "I offered to buy him off, but he threatened to serve me up with dumplings and wear my scalp in his belt. Such insolence! Alicia wouldn't speak to me for a week."

"You made a mistake there," said I. "Running Elk is a Sioux. As for Alicia, she's thoroughly spoiled. She's never been denied any single thing in all her life, and she has your disposition. It's a difficult situation."

"Difficult! It's scandalous—hideous!"

"How old is Alicia?"

"Nineteen. Oh, I've worn out that argument! She says she'll wait. You know, she has her own money, from her mother."

"Does Running Elk come to your house?"

"At this my old friend roared so fiercely that I hastened to say: 'I'll see the boy at once. I have more influence with him than anybody else.'

"I hope you can show him how impossible, how criminal, it is to ruin my girl's life." Harman said this seriously. "Yes, and mine, too, for that matter. Suppose the yellow newspapers got hold of this!" He shuddered. "Doc, I love that girl so well that I'd kill her with my own hands rather than see her disgraced, ridiculed!"

"Tut, tut!" said I. "That's pride—just plain, selfish pride."

"I don't care a damn what it is, I'd do it. I earned my way in the world, but she's got blue blood in her and she was born to a position; she goes everywhere. When she comes out she'll be able to marry into the best circles in America. She could marry a Duke, if she wanted to. I'd buy her one if she said the word. Naturally, I can't stand for this dirty, low-browed Injun."

"He's not dirty," I declared, "and he's not as low-browed as some foreigner you'd be glad to pick out for her."

"Well, he's an Injun," retorted Harman, "and that's enough. We've both seen 'em tried; they all drop back where they started from. You know that as well as I do."

"I don't know it," said I, thinking of my theories. "I've been using him to make an experiment, but—the experiment has gotten away from me. I dare say you're right. I wanted him to meet and know white girls, but I didn't want him to marry one—certainly not a girl like Alicia. No, we must put a stop to this affair. I'll see him right away."

"Tomorrow is Thanksgiving," said Henry. "Wait over and go up with us and see the football game."

"Are you going?"

"Harman grimaced. 'Alicia made me promise. I'd rather take her than let her go with friends—there's no telling what she might do.'

"Why let her go at all?" I objected.

"The old fellow laughed mirthlessly. 'Why let her? Running Elk plays football! How stop her? We'll pick you up at your hotel in the morning and drive you up in the car. It's the big game of the year. You'll probably enjoy it. I won't!"

"Miss Harman seemed glad to see me on the following day. She must have known that I was in her father's confidence, but she was too well schooled to show it. As we rode out in the big limousine I undertook to study her, but the reading of women isn't my game. All I could see was a beautiful, spirited, imperious girl with the Harman eyes and chin. She surprised me by mentioning Running Elk of her own free will; she wasn't in the least embarrassed, and, while her father's face whitened, she preserved her quiet dignity, and I realized that she was in no wise ashamed of her infatuation. I didn't wonder that the old gentleman chose to accompany her to this game, although he must have known that the sight of Running Elk would pain him like a branding iron.

"It was the first great gridiron battle I had ever seen, and so I was unprepared for the spectacle. The enthusiasm of that immense crowd astonished me, and in spite of the fact that I had come as a tired old man, it got into my veins until my heart pounded and my pulses leaped. The songs, the shouts, the bellows of that multitude were intensely thrilling, for youth was in them. I grew young again, and I was half ashamed of myself until I saw other people of my own age who had also become boys and girls for the day. And the seriousness of it! Why, it was painful! Not one of those countless thousands was a disinterested spectator; they were all intensely partisan, and you'd have thought life or death hung on the victory.

"Not one, did I say? There was one who held himself aloof from all the enthusiasm. Old Henry sat like a lump of granite, and out of regard for him I tried to restrain myself.

"We had a box, close to the side lines, with the elite of the East on either hand—people whose names I had read. They bowed and smiled and waved to our little party, and I felt quite important.

"You've probably seen similar games, so there's no need of my describing this one, even if I could. It was my first experience, however, and it impressed me greatly. When the teams appeared I recognized Running Elk at a distance. So did the hordes of madmen behind us, and I began to understand for the first time what it was that the old man in the seat next to mine was combating.

"A dancing dervish in front of the grand stand said something through a megaphone, then he waved a cane, whereupon a tremendous barking, 'Rah! Rah! Rah!' broke out. It ended with my Sioux boy's name, and I wished the old chief back in Dakota were there to see his son and to witness the honor done him by the whites.

"Quite as impressive to me as this demonstration was the death-like silence which settled over that tremendous throng when the teams scattered out in readiness. The other side kicked off, and the ball sailed high and far. As it settled in its downward flight, I saw a lithe, tall shadow of a man racing toward it, and I recognized my boy. I'd lost his position for the mo-

THIRTEENTH INSTALLMENT.

LANDOVER walked beside the thoughtful Ruth as she crossed the green on her way home. He studied her lovely profile out of the corner of his eye. As they drew away from the dispersing throng he spoke to her.

"If money were of any value here in this God-forsaken spot I would offer considerably more than a penny for your thoughts, Ruth."

She started slightly. "You couldn't buy them, Mr. Landover. They are not for sale at any price."

"I suppose there is no harm in venturing a guess, however. You will give me one guess, won't you?"

"All the guesses you like, free of charge," she rejoined airily.

"You are trying to decide whether or not it was all done for effect."

She smiled mysteriously, looking straight ahead. Her eyes were very bright.

"You are wrong. I was thinking about hats, Mr. Landover. Don't you know that every woman's thoughts run to hats on Easter?"

"I confess I had a better opinion of him," he said, disregarding her flippancy. "I don't like him, but I've never suspected him of being a stupid ass before."

"Of whom are you speaking?" she inquired, suddenly looking him full in the eye.

"Our mutual friend, the enemy," he replied.

"Mr. Percival?"

"Certainly."

"But I thought he was beneath our notice."

"We can't very well help noticing him when he goes to such extreme lengths to attract attention."

"You think he did it to attract attention?"

"Not so much that, perhaps, as to get back into the limelight. You see, he was rather out of it for as much as half an hour, and he simply couldn't stand it. So he went off and staged a little sideshow of his own."

She walked on in silence for a few moments, torn by doubts and misgivings. Landover's sarcastic analysis was like a douche of cold water. Perhaps he was right. It had been a spectacular, not to say diverting, exhibition. Her eyes darkened. An expression of pain lurked in them.

"I can't believe it of him, Mr. Landover," she said at last, in a slightly muffled voice.

"I thought it was understood you were to call me Abel, my dear."

"If he did it deliberately, and with that motive, it was unspeakable," she went on, a faint furrow appearing between her eyes.

"Of course, I may be wrong," said he magnanimously. "It may have been the result of an honest, uncontrollable impulse. But I doubt it."

"Men do strange, queer things when under the influence of a strong emotion," she said, a hopeful note in her voice.

"I can only say that it ought to have been done before, Ruth, not during the exercises."

"It was his way of publicly admitting he was wrong in insisting that it should remain."

"He had his way with that weak-kneed committee as usual. The tactics of that Copperhead camp he talks so much about are hardly applicable to conditions here. We are not law-defying ruffians, you know—and these are women of quite another order."

"No one, not even you, Mr. Landover, can say that he has been anything but kind and considerate and sympathetic," she flashed. "He is firm, but isn't that what we want? And the people worship him; they will do anything for him. Even Manuel Crust respects him and obeys him. And you, down in your heart, respect him. He is your kind of a man, Mr. Landover. He does things."

Landover shrugged his shoulders expressively. "Isn't it

THE STORY.

Set helplessly adrift by an explosion of bombs, planted by German agents, the great liner Doraine, bound from South America for a port in the United States, has been all but wrecked by a storm and then driven by wind and tide into a basin which is the center of an uninhabited island. Here the ship runs aground, and the survivors of the disaster set about planning for a future in which the hope of rescue seems hopelessly remote. The dominant figure among them is Algernon Adonis Percival, an American mining engineer, who started the voyage as a stowaway, his money having been stolen at the port of embarkation. In the general bewilderment over the strange situation, Percival's natural qualities of leadership have asserted themselves, bringing him a position of some authority, and, incidentally, the interested regard of two women—Ruth Okton, an American girl, traveling with her aunt, Mrs. Spofford, and Olga Obosky, a Russian dancer. In directing the work of building huts and exploring the island, Percival clashes with Abel Landover, a famous capitalist, who refuses to submit to discipline and is worsted in a hand-to-hand encounter with the young engineer. This proceeding Ruth resents as needlessly brutal, and she begins treating Percival with marked coolness, at the same time showing herself not at all reluctant to accept Landover's attentions. Meanwhile a mutiny of a more serious nature has been developing among a lawless element led by Manuel Crust, a Portuguese gang foreman. One night a 15-year-old girl is found in the woods, horribly mistreated. Crust's men are suspected, but to everyone's surprise the crime is confessed by two men not counted among his followers. These are publicly hanged, and the gibbet is still standing at the edge of a wheat field when the colony gathers for services on Easter Sunday. Percival observes Ruth's horror at what seems a desecration of the day, and, while the exercises are still going on, slips away and chops the scaffold down in full view of the mystified worshippers.

quite plain to you that Percival was pouting like a schoolboy because he had not been asked to take part in today's exercises?"

"He was asked to take part in them. I asked him myself."

He glanced at her sharply. "You never told me you had asked him, Ruth."

"The night the crime was committed," she said briefly. "He was very nice about it. He promised to sing in the choir and—to help me with the decorations. After our unpleasant experience the next day he had the—shall I say tact or kindness?—to reconsider his promise."

"Openly advertising the fact that he preferred to have no part in any entertainment you were arranging," was Landover's comment. "I don't believe it was because of any particular delicacy of feeling on his part, my dear. In any case, the fact remains that he let you go ahead with the affair, and then, bang! right in the middle of it, he stages his cheap, melodramatic, moving-picture act. Bosh!"

She turned on him with blazing eyes.

"You will not see anything good in him, will you? You can't be fair, can you? Well, I can be, and I am. He has been fair with both of us, and I am ashamed of the way I have treated him. We deserved his rebuke that morning, and he did not hesitate to turn us back, although he realized what it would mean. He loves me, Abel Landover—he loves me a thousand times more than you do, in spite of all your protestations. He!"

"Why, Ruth—I—I!"

"Yes, I know. I know you are shocked. And I don't care! Do you understand? I don't care that! You want your answer, Mr. Landover. Well, you shall have it now. I cannot marry you. This is final."

The blood left his face. "You don't know what you are saying, Ruth!" he exclaimed. "You are angry. When you have had time to—"

"I've had all the time I need," she interrupted shortly. "I don't want to be disagreeable, but it's no use, Mr. Landover. I do not love you. I am sorry if I have misled you into hoping. There is nothing more to be said."

"You have misled me," he cried out bitterly.

"I am to blame, I suppose, for not giving you your answer before this. I have temporized. It's a woman's trick—and a horrid one—I'll admit. I have never even thought of marrying you."

"Are you in love with Percival?" he demanded.

"Yes, I think I am," she replied, looking him straight in the eye. She spoke with a sort of gasp, as if releasing a confession that surprised even herself.

"My God, Ruth! I can't believe it," he groaned.

"I have denied it to myself—oh, a thousand times. I've fought against it. I've tried to hate him. I've done everything in my power to make him believe that I despise him. But it's no use—it's no use. I—I can't think of anything else. I can't think of anyone else. Oh, I know I am quite mad to say this, but I sometimes find myself praying that we may never be rescued. It might mean—well, you can see what it might mean. Thank God, you have driven me to this confession. It is the first time I have been really honest with myself. I have lied to myself over and over again about my feeling toward him. I have lain awake for hours at night, lying to myself—telling myself that I hate him and always will hate him. Now it's out—the truth is out. I have never hated him. I have cared for him from the very beginning."

She spoke rapidly, the words rushing forth like a flood suddenly released after breaking through the dam, sweeping everything before it, resistless, devastating, cruelly rapturous. She thought nothing of the hurt she was inflicting upon the man beside her; he was an atom in the path of the torrent, a thing that went down and was left behind as the flood swept over and by him. As suddenly as it began the torrent was checked. A hot flush seared her neck, her cheeks, her brow.

"What a fool you must think me!" she cried in dire chagrin. "What a stupid fool!"

He had not taken his eyes from her transfigured face.

"He loves me, Abel Landover—he loves me a thousand times more than you do, in spite of all your protestations."

"Well, then," said he, "I got a little story to tell you."

He had listened with his jaw set, his lips tightly pressed, his brow dark with anger.

"I don't think that," he said shortly. "You have merely lost your head, as any woman might, over a picturesque, good-looking soldier of fortune." Perhaps I should not be surprised, nor even shocked, by what you've just told me. He is the sort that women do fall in love with, and I suppose they are not to be blamed for it. No, I do not think you are a fool. When one reflects that such experienced heads as those possessed by the irreproachable Obosky, the immaculate Amori, to say nothing of the estimable lady we are pleased to call the 'Empress of Brazil'—when such heads as theirs are turned by a man it is high time to admit that he has something more than personal magnetism. I am wondering how far the contagion has really spread. There is a difference between contagion and infection, you know. Infection is the result of personal contact; contagion is something in the air. This epidemic of infatuation very plainly is in two forms. It appears to be both infectious and contagious. I rather fancy the amiable Obosky has selected the former type of the prevailing malady. Percivalitis, I believe, is the name it goes by."

There was no mistaking the significance of his words. The implication was clear, even though veiled in the heaviest sarcasm. He had the satisfaction of seeing the color ebb from her cheek. Her face being averted, he missed the swift flicker of pain that rushed to her eyes, and, departing, took away with it the soft light that had glowed in them the instant before. He had touched a concealed canker, the sensitive spot that had been the real cause of her sleepless, troubled nights, the thing she had refused in her pride to accept as the real source of discomfort.

Down in her soul lay the poison of jealousy, a cruel and malignant influence, that until now had been subdued by a mind stubbornly unwilling to recognize its existence.

In the eagerness to supply herself with additional reasons for hating Percival, she had given her imagination a rather free rein in regard to his relations with Olga Obosky. While she was without actual proof, she nevertheless tortured herself with suspicions that came almost to the same thing. In any case, they had the desired effect in that they created a very positive sense of irritation, and nothing seemed to please her more in the dead hour of night than the feeling that she had a right to be disgusted with him.

And now Landover, in his sly arraignment, prodded a very live, raw spot, and she knew that it was bleak unhappiness and not rancor that had kept her awake.

"Is it necessary to beat about the bush, Mr. Landover? If you have anything definite to tell me about Mr. Percival and Mme. Obosky, I grant you permission to say all you have to say in the plainest language. Call a spade a spade. I am quite old enough to hear things called by their right names."

"Since you have been so quick to get my meaning, I don't consider it necessary to go into details. I dare say you have ears and eyes of your own. You can see and hear as well as I, unless you are resolved to be both blind and deaf."

"Did you not hear me say that I know he loves me?"

"Yes, I heard you quite distinctly."

"As a rule, do men love two women at the same time?" she inquired, patiently.

"I have never said that he loves Obosky. It was barely possible, however, that he may not choose to resist her, if that conveys anything to your intelligence."

"It does and it does not," she replied, steadily. "You see, I believe in him. I trust him."

"And I suppose you trust Olga Obosky," he said, with a sneer.

"I understand Olga Obosky far better than you do, Mr. Landover."

"I doubt it," said he dryly.

"She is my friend."

"Ah! That measurably simplifies the situation. She will no doubt prove her friendship by delivering Mr. Percival to you, slightly damaged, but guaranteed to—"

"Please be good enough to remember, Mr. Landover, that you are not speaking to Manuel Crust," she exclaimed haughtily, and, with flaming cheeks, swept past him.

He hesitated a moment, and then started to follow her. She stopped short, and, facing him, cried out: "Don't follow me! I do not want to hear another word. Stop! I can see by your eyes that you are ashamed—you want to apologize. I do not want to hear it. I am hurt—terribly hurt. Nothing you can say will help matters now, Mr. Landover."

"Just a second, Ruth," he cried, now thoroughly dismayed. "Give me a chance to explain. It was my mad, unreasoning love that—"

But with an exclamation of sheer disgust she put her fingers to her ears and sped rapidly down the walk. He stood still, watching her until she entered the cabin door and closed it behind her. Then he completed the broken sentence, but not in the voice of humility nor with the words that he had intended to utter.

"Soapy" Shay, coming up the walk, distinctly heard what he said.

"What's the matter, Bill?" he inquired, pausing. "Did she throw the hooks into you?"

Landover glared at him balefully. "You go to hell, damn you," he snarled, and walked away.

"Soapy" rubbed his chin dubiously as he watched the retreating figure. Pursing his thin lips, he turned his attention to an unoffending stump six or eight feet away and scowled at it vindictively. He was turning something over in his mind, and he was manifestly in a state of indecision. Ruminating, he spoke aloud, perhaps for the benefit of a Portuguese farmhand, who happened to be approaching from the opposite direction, but who still had some rods to cover before he was within hearing distance.

"Gee, he's getting to be as decent and democratic as any of us. Shows what association will do for a man. Two months ago he would have been too high and mighty to tell me to go to hell. If he keeps on at this rate he'll be worth payin' attention to in a couple of months more. Won't he, Bill?" This to the farmhand, who obligingly halted.

Mr. Shay made constant and impartial use of the name Bill. Except in a very few instances, he applied it to all males over the age of 2, and he did it so genially that resentment was rare. Americans, Britons, Irishmen, Portuguese, Spaniards, Indians, Swedes—all races, in fact, except the Hebrew—came under the sweeping appellation. His Hebrew acquaintances were addressed by the name of Ike.

It so happened that this particular "Bill" was lamentably slow in picking up the English language. It was even said that he prided himself on being half-witted. However, being an exceedingly dull creature, he was quite naturally a polite one. He was a good listener. You could speak English to him by the hour and never be annoyed by verbal interruptions. At regular intervals he would insert a shrug of the shoulders, or nod his head, or lift an eyebrow, or spread out his hands, or purse his lips, and he never smiled unless you did.

Perceiving that some sort of an answer was expected, "Bill" wisely shrugged his shoulders. "Soapy" interpreted the shrug as affirmative, having a distinct advantage over "Bill," who hadn't the faintest idea which it was, and proceeded to go a little deeper into the matter.

"Now, as I was saying, this Landover guy is up against something, Bill. She handed him something he didn't like. Right on the nose, too, if I'm any judge. What do you suppose it was, Bill?"

"Bill" nodded his head very earnestly.

"That's what I think," said "Soapy," fixing his hearer with a moody, speculative frown. "Now, I know something about this Landover guy that she don't know. I suppose A. A. will give me an awful panning if I up and tell her what I saw that day. He seems to think it's a secret."

There was a slight pause, suggesting to "Bill" that he ought to frown as if also in doubt.

"At the same time, I think she ought to be told, don't you, Bill?"

This called for something definite. So Bill scratched his left ear.

"In the first place, she's too nice a girl to be hitched up with a Priscilla like him. Now, I don't know what happened here a couple of minutes ago, but it looks to me as if she needs a little moral support. It strikes me that this would be a good time to tell her. What do you think, Bill?"

Always on the lookout for rising inflections, "Bill" was ever in a position to give prompt replies. He could dispose of the most profound questions almost before they were out of the speaker's mouth. His answer to "Soapy's" query was a broad grin, for he had detected a sly twinkle in the speaker's eye. He also shrugged his shoulders and spread out his hands, and, to clinch the matter, he winked.

"Now, I don't want to take this important step without being backed up by some clever, intelligent feller like you, Bill," went on "Soapy." "It's all for her good and A. A.'s, too, although he won't see it in that light. If you say you think she ought to be told, that's enough for me. If you say she oughtn't—why, nothing doing. It's up to you, Bill."

"Bill" was plainly at sea. You can't decide a question that lacks an interrogation point. So all that "Bill" could do was to stare blankly at "Soapy" and wait for something tangible to turn up. Mr. Shay suddenly appreciated the poor fellow's dilemma and supplied the necessary relief.

"What say, Bill?"

Whereupon "Bill" started to shake his head, but, catching the scowl of disapproval on "Soapy's" brow, hastily changed his reply to a vigorous nod.

"Good!" exclaimed Mr. Shay. "That completely clears my conscience. So long, Bill."

And half a minute later he presented himself at Ruth Clinton's cabin.

"Goodness!" exclaimed Mrs. Spofford, as she opened the door. She also opened her eyes very wide, and sent a startled, apprehensive glance over her shoulder into the warm, firelit interior. "What do you want?" she demanded querulously of the unexpected visitor.

Mr. Shay took off his hat. "I'd like a few words with Miss Clinton," he said. "I saw her come in, so she's not out. It's important, ma'am. She will hear something to her advantage, as they say in the personals."

"Will you please return at 3 o'clock, Mr. Shay? My niece is resting after the arduous labors of the—"

"I darsent wait," said "Soapy," with a furtive glance over his shoulder. "If he sees me I'll probably have to change my mind."

"Who is it, Annie?" called out a clear voice from within.

"Soapy" Shay, replied the visitor himself.

"Mr. Landover will be here presently, Mr. Shay," began the obstacle in the doorway.

"I guess not," broke in "Soapy," forgetting himself so far as to wink. "I expect you haven't heard the news, ma'am. He's had his nose put out of joint."

"Good heavens! His nose out of—"

"Come in, Soapy," cried Ruth.

"Ruth, my dear—do you know who—do you know what—"

ment, but I knew that hungry, predatory stride with devoured the yards as if he were a thing of the wind. He was off with the ball in the hollow of his arm, right back into the heart of his enemies, dodging, darting, leaping, twisting, always advancing. They tore his interference away from him, but, nevertheless, he penetrated their ranks and none of them could lay hands upon him. He was running free when tackled; his assailant launched himself with such savage violence that the sound of their impact came to us distinctly. As he fell I heard Alicia Harman gasp. Then the crowd gave tongue.

From that time on to the finish of the game my eyes seldom left Running Elk, and then only long enough to shoot covert glances at my companions.

Although the skill of my young Sioux overtopped that of all the other contestants, the opposing team played as one man; they were like a wonderful, well-oiled piece of machinery, and—they scored. All through the first half our side struggled to retaliate, but at the intermission they had not succeeded.

"So far, Running Elk hadn't noticed our presence, but when the teams returned for the second half he saw us. He hadn't even know that I was in the East; in fact, he didn't laid eyes on me for more than three years. The sight of me there in the box with Alicia and her father must have been an unpleasant shock to him; my face must have seemed an evil omen; nevertheless, he waved his hand at me and smiled—one of his reserved smiles. I couldn't help marveling at the fellow's physical beauty.

"I had been secretly hoping that his side would be defeated, so that Miss Harman might see him for once as a loser; but the knowledge of our presence seemed to electrify him, and by the spark of his own magnetism he fired his fellows until they commenced to play like madmen; I have no doubt they were precisely that. His spirit was like some galvanic current, and he directed them with a master mind. He was a natural born strategist, of course, for through him ran the blood of the craftiest race of all the earth, the blood of a people who have always fought against odds, to whom a forlorn hope is an assurance of victory. On this day the son of a Sioux chief led the men of that great university with the same skill that Hannibal led his Carthaginian cohorts up to the gates of Rome. He led them with the cunning of Chief Joseph, the greatest warrior of his people. He was indefatigable, irresistible, magnificent—and he himself tied the score.

"In spite of myself, I joined madly in the cheering; but the boy didn't let down. Now that his enemies recognized the source of their peril, they focused upon him all their fury. They tried to destroy him. They fell upon him like animals; they worried and they harried and they battered him until I felt sick for him and for the girl beside me, who had grown so faint and pale. But his body was of my making; I had spent careful years on it, and although they wore themselves out, they could not break Running Elk. He remained a fleeting, an elusive thing, with the vigor of a wild horse. He tackled their runners with the ferocity of a wolf.

"It was a grand exhibition of coolness and courage, for he was everywhere, always alert and always ready—and it was he who won the game.

"There came some sort of a fumble, too fast for the eye to follow, and then the ball rolled out of the scrimmage. Before we knew what had happened, Running Elk was away with it, a scattered field ahead of him.

"I dare say you have heard about that run, for it occurred in the last three minutes of play, and is famous in football annals to this day, so I'm told. It was a spectacular performance, apparently devised by fate to make more difficult the labors of old Henry and me. Every living soul on those high-banked bleachers was on his feet at the finish, a senseless, screaming demon. I saw Alicia, straining forward, her face like chalk, her very lips blanched, her whole high-strung body quiver. Her eyes were distended, and in them I saw a look which told me that this was no mere girl's whim, that this was more than the animal call of youth and sex. Running Elk had become a fetish to her.

"The father must likewise have recognized this, for as we passed he stammered into my ear:

"You see, Doc, the girl's mad. It's awful—awful. I don't know what to do."

"We had become momentarily separated from her, and therefore I urged him: 'Get her away, quick, no matter how or where. Use force if you have to, but get her out of this crowd, this atmosphere, and keep her away. I'll see him tonight.'

"The old fellow nodded. 'I'll—I'll kidnap her and take her to Europe,' he mumbled. 'God! It's awful!'

"I didn't go back to the city with the Harmans; but I told Alicia good-by at the running board of the machine. I don't think she heard me.

"Running Elk was glad to see me, and I spent that evening with him. He asked all about his people; he told me of his progress, and he spoke lightly of his victory that day. But sound him as I would, I could elicit no mention of Alicia Harman's name. He wasn't much of a talker, anyhow, so at last I was forced to bring up the subject myself. At my first word the silence of his forefathers fell upon him and all he did was listen. I told him forcibly that any thoughts of her were ridiculous and impossible.

"Why?" said he, after I had finished.

"I told him a thousand reasons why; I recounted them cruelly, unfeelingly, but he made no sign. As a matter of fact, I don't think he understood the affair itself. He appeared to be blinded, confused by the splendor of what had come to him. Alicia was so glorious, so different, so mysterious to him, that he had lost all sense of perspective and of proportion. Recognizing this, I desisted to material things which I knew he could grasp.

"I paid for your education," said I, "and it is almost over with. In a few months you'll be turned out to make your own living, and then you'll encounter this race prejudice I speak of in a way to affect your stomach and your body. You're a poor man, Running Elk, and you've got to earn your way. Your blood will bar you from a good many means of doing it, and when your color begins to affect your earning capacity you'll have all you can do to take care of yourself. Life isn't played on a gridiron, and the first thing you've got to do is to make a man of yourself. You've got no right to fill your head with dreams, with insane fancies of this sort."

"Yes, sir!" said he, and that was about all I could get out of him. His reticence was very annoying.

"I didn't see him again, for I came West the next day, and the weeks stretched into months without word of him or of the others.

"Shortly before he was due to return I was taken sick—the one big illness of my life, which came near ending me, which made me into the creaking old ruin that I am. They sent me away to another climate, where I got worse; then they shifted me about like a bale of goods, airing me here and there. For a year and a half I hung over the edge, one ailment running into another; but finally I straightened out a bit and tottered back into Washington to resume operations.

"For six months I hung around headquarters, busied on department matters. I had lost all track of things out here, meanwhile, for the agent had been changed shortly after I left, and no one had taken the trouble to keep me posted; but eventually I showed up on the reservation again, reaching here on the first of July, three days before the annual celebration of the people.

"Many changes had occurred in my two years' absence, and there was no one to bring me gossip, hence I heard little during the first day or two while I was picking up the loose ends of my work. One thing I did find out, however—namely, that Running Elk had come straight home from college, and was still on the reservation. I determined to look him up during the festival.

"But on the morning of the Fourth I got the surprise of my life. The stage from the railroad brought two women, two strange women, who came straight to my office—Alicia Harman and her French maid.

"Well, I was fairly knocked endwise; but Alicia was as well poised and as self-contained as on that Thanksgiving morning in New York when she and old Henry had picked me up in their automobile—a trifle more stunning and a bit more determined, perhaps. Oh, she was a splendid creature, in the first glory of her womanhood, a perfectly groomed and an utterly graceful young goddess. She greeted me graciously, with that queenly air of all-great ladies.

"Where's your father?" I asked as she laid off her dust coat.

"He's in New York," said she. "I'm traveling alone."

"And where have you been all this time?"

"In Europe, mainly; Rome, Naples, Cairo, India, St. Petersburg, London—all about, in fact. Father took me abroad the day after Thanksgiving—you remember? And he has kept me there. But I came of age two weeks ago."

"Two weeks!" I ejaculated.

"Yes, I took the first ship after my birthday. I've been traveling pretty constantly ever since. This is a long way from the world out here, isn't it?" She looked around curiously.

"From your world, yes," said I, and when she offered nothing further I grew embarrassed. I started to speak; then, noting the maid, I hesitated; but Alicia shook her head faintly.

"Lisette doesn't understand a word of English," said she.

"Why have you come out here, Alicia?" I inquired. I was far more ill at ease than she.

"Do you need to ask?" She eyed me defiantly. "I respected father's wishes when I was in my minority. I traveled and studied and did all the tiresome things he commanded me to do—as long as he had the right to command. But when I became my own mistress I—took my full freedom. He made his life a suit himself; I intend to make mine to suit myself. I'm sorry I can't please him, but we don't seem to see things the same way, and I dare say he has accepted the inevitable."

"Then you consider this—this move you evidently contemplate as inevitable?"

"She lifted her dainty brows. 'Inevitable isn't a good word. I wish a certain thing; I have wished it from the first; I have never ceased for an instant to wish it; I feel that I must have it; therefore, to all intents and purposes, it is inevitable. Anyhow, I'm going to have it.'

"You have—been in communication with—"

"Never! Father forbade it."

"Then how did you know he is here?"

"He wrote me when he left college. He said he was coming home. I've heard nothing since. He is here, isn't he?"

"So I believe. I haven't seen him yet; you know I've been away myself."

"Will you take me to him?"

"Have you really weighed this thing? I remonstrated. 'Do you realize what it means?'

"Please don't," she smiled wearily. 'So many people have tried to argue me out of my desires. I shall not spoil my life, believe me; it is too good a thing to ruin. That is precisely why I'm here.'

"If you insist," I gave in reluctantly. 'Of course, I'll put myself at your service. We'll look for him tomorrow.' All sorts of wild expedients to thwart a meeting were scurrying through my mind.

"We'll go today," said she.

"But—"

"At once! If you're too busy, I'll ask somebody else—"

"Very well!" said I. 'We'll drive out to the encampment.' And I sent for my buckboard.

"I was delayed in spite of myman until nearly sundown, and meanwhile Alicia Harman waited in my office, pacing the floor with ill-concealed impatience. Before starting I ventured one more remonstrance, for I was filled with misgivings, and the more I saw of this girl the more fantastic and unnatural this affair seemed. But the unbridled impulses of her parents were bearing fruit, and no one could say her nay. She afforded the most illuminating study in heredity that I have ever witnessed.

"We didn't say much during our 15-mile drive, for I was worried and Alicia was oddly torn between apprehension and exultation. We had left the French maid behind. I don't know that any woman ever went to her lurcher under stranger circumstances or in greater perturbation of spirit than did this girl, behind whom lay a generation of selfishness and unrestraint.

"It was well along in the evening when we came over the ridge and saw the encampment below us. You can imagine the fairy picture it made with its myriad of twinkling fires, with the soft effulgence of a thousand glowing tents, and with the wonderful magic of the night over it all. As we drew nearer, the unusual sounds of a strange merrymaking came to us—the soft thudding of drums, the weird melody of the dances, the stir and the confusion of crowded animal life. In the daylight it would have been sufficiently picturesque, but under the wizard hand of the darkness it became 10 times more so.

"When I finally tied my horses and led the girl into the heart of it I think she became a bit frightened, for these Indians were the Sioux of a bygone day. They were barbaric in dress and in demeanor.

"I guided her through the tangle of tepees, through glaring fire-lit circles and through black voids where we stumbled and had to feel our way. We were jostled and elbowed by fierce warriors and by sullen squaws. At every group I asked for Running Elk, but he was merely one of 5000, and nobody knew his whereabouts. 'The people have ever been jealous of their customs, and as a result we were frequently greeted by cold looks and sullen silences. Recognizing this open resentment, my companion let down a thick automobile veil which effectually hid her face. Her dust coat was long and loose and served further to conceal her identity.

"At one time we came upon a sight I would gladly have spared her—the spectacle of some wrinkled hags strangling a dog by the light of a fire. The girl at my side stifled a cry at the apparition.

"What are they doing?" she gasped.

"Preparing the feast," I told her.

"Do they—really?"

"They do," said I. 'Come!' I tried to force her onward, but she would not stir until the sacrifice had been dragged to the flames, where other carcasses were singeing among the pots and kettles. From every side came the smell of cooking meat, mingled with the odor of burning hair and flesh. I could hear Miss Harman panting as we went on.

"We circled half the great hoop before we came upon the trail of our man, and were directed to a nearby tepee, upon the glowing walls of which many heads were outlined in silhouette, and from which came the monotonous voice of a story teller.

"I don't know what hopes the girl had been nursing; she must have looked upon these people not as kindred of Running Elk, but rather as his servants, his slaves. Realizing that her quest was nearly ended, humbler folk who are not too proud to haggle over the last cent they have to spend. We sympathize, knowing that often they are men and women whose pride is not based upon their own vanity, but habit enforced by the sheer necessity of making a good appearance in their business or social relations, against the pressure of high costs, sometimes expensive families and low income."

Those who do not mind admitting their purchases are for their own use are the foreign-born patrons, he said. Often they are honest when they say they are buying for their relatives on the farm or in the old country. Large consignments of clothing have been shipped direct from the shop to addresses in Germany, Italy, Greece, Russia. An Italian laborer about to return to his native land with his pockets well lined, bought presents of worn furs, hats, dresses, suits for old and young, and did not seem to think it would be necessary to excuse the fact that they were second-hand. So that the prejudice against wearing other people's castoffs may be a peculiarly American one.

"Don't you have difficulty in getting half-worn garments now that there does seem to be concerted action in favor of wearing old clothes, a revolt against the high prices that really seems to be having some effect upon the clothing manufacturers?" he was asked.

"No difficulty yet," he responded. "The high prices work both ways to our benefit. A lot of people have got rich and consequently careless with lightly earned profits. Others drawing high wages have become spendthrift. There is just as much careless discarding of clothing on the one hand as there is pinching and saving to meet the high prices on the other. There are people whose mode of living the economic situation has had little effect upon, who haven't changed their habit of buying new outfits at accustomed intervals. In the apartment house districts, where space is at a premium, there are housewives who get rid of all their surplus at housecleaning time. It is from the West End apartment house districts in the spring and fall, we get most of our stock."

The merchant said he did not buy from individuals, but reserved all his custom for the peddlers who are known to him and who bring their wares to him in comparatively large consignments. In this way he can take precautions against buying stolen goods and goods from unknown sources, where there may have been contagious diseases. Besides, he said, these peddlers already are better skilled at haggling and will drive better bargains on their own account and so can offer him better prices than any salaried agents he might employ. They bring their wares, spread them before him, he appraises, makes an offer, they accept or take their goods away.

He refuses to haggle or dally over them. Some of them make good livings, he said, others not so good, it depending on how shrewd they were at apprehending the wariness or unwariness of the housewives with whom they mostly deal.

her strength forsook her and she dropped behind me. The entrance to the tepee was congested by those who could not find space inside, but they rose silently upon recognizing me, and made room. I lifted the flap and peered within, clearing a view for Miss Harman.

"We beheld a circle of half-naked braves, in full war regalia, squatting haunch to haunch, listening to a story teller. In front of them was a confusion of blackened pails and steaming vessels, into which they dipped with their naked fingers. Their faces were greasy with traces of the dish, the air of the place was reeking from their breaths. My eyes were slower than Alicia's, and so I did not distinguish our quarry at first, although a slow sigh at my ear and a convulsive clutch at my arms told me that he was there.

"And then I, too, saw Running Elk. It was he who was talking, to whom the others listened. What a change two years had wrought! His voice was harsh and guttural, his face, through the painted daubs and streaks, was coarser and duller than when I had seen him. His very body was more thin and shrunken.

"He finished his tale while we stared at him; the circle broke into commendatory grunts, and he smiled in childlike satisfaction at the impression he had made. He leaned forward and, scrutinizing the litter of sooty pots, plunged his hand into the nearest one.

"Miss Harman stumbled back into the crowd and her place was taken by a squaw.

"Running Elk," I called, over the heads of those next the entrance, and, seeing my face against the night, he rose and came out, stepping over the others.

"How do you do?" I said. "You haven't forgotten me, have you?"

"He towered head and shoulders above me, his feather head dress adding to his stature. The beaded patterns of his war harness stood out dimly in the half-light.

"No, no! I will never forget you, doctor. You—you have been sick." The change in his speech was even more noticeable when he turned his tongue to English. He halted over his words and he mouthed them hesitatingly.

"Yes, pretty sick. And you, what are you doing?"

"I do what the rest do," said he. "Nothing! I have some horses and a few head of cattle, that is all."

"Are you satisfied?" I demanded, sharply. He eyed me darkly for an instant, then he answered, slowly:

"I am an Indian. I am satisfied."

"Then education didn't do you any good, after all?"

"I was offended, disappointed; I must have spoken gruffly."

"This time he paused a long while before he replied.

"I had dreams," said he, "many dreams, and they were splendid; but you told me that dreams were out of place in a Sioux, so I forgot them, along with all the things I had learned. It is better so."

which I did not recognize, so I shook hands with Running Elk and turned away. He bowed his head and slunk back through the tepee door, back into the heart of his people, back into the past, and with him went my experiment. Since then I have never meddled with the gods nor given them cause to laugh at me."

The doctor arose and stretched himself, then he entered his tent for a match. The melancholy pulse of the drums and the minor-keyed chant which issued out of the night sounded like a dirge sung by a dying people.

"What became of Running Elk?" I inquired.

The old man answered from within. "That was he I asked about the horse races. He's the man you couldn't understand, who wouldn't talk to you. He's

WEST WIND DRIFT

"Sure she knows," again interrupted "Soapy," unembarrassed. "I'm not after anybody's jewels, Mrs. Spofford, and besides which I am the principal candidate for Sheriff of this bailiwick. You don't suppose a man who's running for the office of Sheriff on Mr. A. A. Percival's ticket is going to lift anything before election, do you? Besides which, I've made up my mind to be straight as long as I'm on this island, and if I'm elected, which I will be, I'm going to see that nobody else does anything crooked. Mr. A. A. Percival is a wise guy, a mighty wise guy. Says he to me, 'Soapy, you are one of the most expert.'"

"Come inside, Soapy," called out Ruth.

Mr. Shay entered. "You better shut the door, Mrs. Spofford," he said, coolly. "What I got to say is private. As I was saying, A. A. says to me: 'Soapy, you are one of the craftiest and slipperiest crooks on this side of the Atlantic Ocean. What you don't know about crime would fill a book about as thick as a postage stamp. There's nobody on this island more fit to be an officer of the law. You know everything that an officer of the law ought to know, and besides which you know everything that a thief has to know. So you're going to be elected Sheriff of Trigger Island.' That's what A. A. says to me, and, as usual, he's dead right. Why, ma'am, there ain't a thief in the universe that can fool me. I don't have to have any evidence—not a grain of it. All I got to do is just to ask 'em why they done it. But what I dropped in to see you about, Miss Ruth, is—say, you ain't by any chance expecting A. A. to drop in, are you? I wouldn't have him ketch me here for!"

"I am not expecting Mr. Percival, Soapy," she said, her gaze fixed expectantly on the man's face.

"Well, then," said he, "I got a little story to tell you. It's the gospel truth. Just try to forget that I used to be a crook and that in ordinary times I am one of the most goshawfulest liars on earth. But there's absolutely no pleasure in lying nowadays, and as for working at my regular trade! Mrs. Spofford, you needn't be the least bit nervous. It ain't necessary for you to set on that trunk. Take this chair, please. Now, you remember some time back that A. A. and your friend Landover had a mixup in the last-named gentleman's stateroom, and you also must remember that Mr. Landover told you about it, and that Mr. Percival never told you anything about it. Well, I was a witness to that fracas. I just happened to be walking along the deck when something caught my eye, and I went up close to see what it was. You'd never guess what it was. After looking at it very carefully I discovered it was a porthole."

Forsaking his whimsical manner, he related tersely, in as few words as possible, the story of the encounter.

"Now, it's my guess that Mr. Abel Landover didn't speak the whole truth and nothing but the truth when he furnished you with his version of the affair. Am I right, or am I wrong?" he asked, in conclusion.

"I prefer to believe Mr. Landover's story," said Mrs. Spofford stiffly. "Will you be good enough to go now, Mr. Shay?"

"Sure," said "Soapy," rising. "I'm not asking anybody to take my word against him. I'm just telling you, that's all. Good afternoon, ladies."

"It was not Mr. Percival who fired that shot? You are sure of that, Soapy?" Ruth was standing now. Her eyes were very dark and tempestuous.

"Sure as my right name ain't Soapy Shay," returned the witness, holding up his right hand.

"Ruth, it isn't possible that you place any credence in—"

"Thank you for coming, Soapy," interrupted Ruth. "It was very good of you."

"Soapy" lingered at the door, fumbling his dilapidated hat. Mrs. Spofford was staring speechlessly at her niece.

"I'd a little sooner you wouldn't say anything to A. A. about me peaching on him," said "Soapy," somewhat nervously.

"I shall not 'peach' on you, Soapy," said the girl, a joyous smile suddenly illuminating her face.

"Soapy" went out. As he closed the door he said to himself: "Next time you tell me to go to hell, Abel Landover, I guess you'd better furnish a guide that knows the way."

As soon as the door was closed, Mrs. Spofford turned upon her radiant niece.

"You are not such a fool as to believe that rascal's story, Ruth?"

"I believe every word of it," cried the girl.

Sailors, sniffing the gale that night, shook their heads and said there was snow on the tail of it. Morning found the ground mottled with splashes of white and a fine, frostlike sleet blowing fitfully across the plain. The ridge of trees over against the shore became vague and shapeless beneath the filmy veil, while the sea out beyond the breakers was clothed in a gray shroud, bleak and impenetrable.

Knapendyke was positive and reassuring in his contention that no great amount of snow ever fell upon the island. While much of the vegetation was of a character indigenous to the temperate zone, there was, he pointed out, another type peculiar to tropical climates, and; although the latter was of a singularly hardy nature, it was not calculated to survive the rigors of a harsh, protracted winter.

"We'll have spells like this, off and on, just as they occasionally do in Florida or Southern California, is the way I figure it out," he said to the group of uneasy men who contemplated the embryonic blizzard with alarm and misgiving. "Moreover, I believe the wet, cold season is a short one here. The birds are content to stick it out. The fact there is no migration is proof enough for me that the winter is never severe. As the weather prognosticators say, look out for squalls, unsettled weather, frost tonight, rising temperature tomorrow, rain the next day, doctors' bills the end of the month. Avoid crowded street cars, passenger elevators and places of amusement. Take plenty of outdoor exercise and don't eat too many strawberries."

Children, on their way to school in the town hall, shouted with glee as they romped in the snow-laden gale. It had no terrors for them. They were not concerned with the dour prospect that brought anxiety to the hearts of their elders.

"It's fine to be a kid," said Percival, watching the antics of a crowd of boys. "Why do we have to grow up?"

"So that we can appreciate what it is to be a kid," said Randolph Fitts.

Ruth Clinton was one of the teachers. There were, all told, about 30 children in the school, their ages ranging from 5 to 14. Most of them were youngsters from the steerage, bright-eyed little Latins, who had picked up with lively avidity no small store of English. They were being taught in English.

The council, spurred by the far-seeing Percival, recognized the perils of a period of inactivity following the harvest and the falling days. The majority of the men would be comparatively idle. Preparations for the building of a small ship occupied the time and interest of a few engineers and ship carpenters, but as some weeks were bound to pass before the work could be begun in earnest, an interim of impatience would have to be bridged. Work, and plenty of it, was the only prescription for despair.

Already symptoms of increasing moodiness marked the men of the less resourceful among the castaways. While it was not generally known, two men had attempted suicide, and one of the Brazilian ladies, a beautiful young married woman, was in a pitiful state of collapse. She had a husband and two small children in Rio Janeiro. The separation was driving her mad. There were others, both men and women, whose minds were never free from the thought of loved ones far across the waters, and whose hearts ached with a great pain that could not be subdued by philosophy, but they were strong and they were cheerful. In their souls burned an unquenchable fire, the fire of hope; they stirred it night and day with the song of the unvanquished.

Improvements in the hastily-constructed cabins provided not only occupation, but interest, for the able-bodied men and women. There was no little rivalry in the matter of interior embellishments; those skilled in the use of implements took great pride in hewing out and adding more or less elaborate ornamentation to the facades of their habitations, such as casements, door posts and capitals, awnings, porches, etc. A shell road was in process of construction from one end of the village to the other, while over in Dismal Forest the woodsmen were even now cutting down the towering Norfolk pines and hewing out the stanch timbers for the ship that was to sail out one day in quest of the world they had left behind them. But these enterprises provided work for men only. The women in the main were without occupation. With the approach of winter the men in active control of the camp's affairs realized that something would have to be done to relieve the strain—at least, to lighten it until spring came to the rescue with toll in the fields and gardens.

A system of exchange was being worked out. As has been mentioned before in this chronicle, the people of the steerage were the plutocrats. Their boardings represented real money, the savings of years. When it came to an actual "showdown," to use Percival's expression, these people, who were poor in the accepted sense, were now rich. They could "buy and sell" the "plutocrats" of another day and another world.

The theory that one good turn deserves another was an insufficient foundation upon which to construct a substantial system of exchange.

To Landover, Block and other financial experts was delegated the power and authority to perfect a fair, impartial monetary system. First of all, they arbitrarily declared the dollar, the peso and the shilling to be without value. "Time" script was to be issued by the governing board, and as this substitute would automatically become useless on the day the castaways were discovered and taken off the island, no citizen was to be allowed to reduce or dissipate his board of real money.

Landover's proposal that a central depository be established for the purpose of holding and safeguarding the possessions of each and every person was primarily intended to prevent the surreptitious use of real money. This project met with almost universal opposition. The "rich" preferred to hang on to their money, thereby running true to form. While professing the utmost confidence in the present integrity of the banker and his friends, they ingenuously wanted to know what chance they would have of getting their money back when these masters of finance were ready to leave the island. So they elected to hide their gold and silver where it would be safe from unscrupulous financiers. And nothing could shake them in this resolve.

"Time" was the basic principle on which the value of the script was to be determined, and as "time" in this instance meant hours and nothing else, a citizen's income depended entirely on his readiness to work. Ten hours represented a full day's work. The hand press on board the Doraine was used to print the "hours," as the little slips made from the stock of menu cardboard were called. They were divided into five denominations, viz., one hour, three hours, five hours, seven hours and ten hours.

Each of these checks bore the signature of Abel T. Landover, and a seal devised by Peter Snipe, who, besides being an author, was something of a draftsman—indeed, his enemies said he was a far better artist than he was an author, which annoyed him tremendously, in view of the fact that he had stopped drawing when he was 15 because eminent cartoonists and illustrators had told him he had no talent at all.

The printing and stamping was done on board the Doraine and the script was shortly to be put into circulation. Landover was slated to become treasurer of Trigger Island at the general election.

As an illustration, this sort of dialogue was soon to become more or less common:

"What's the price of this hat, Mme. Obosky?"

"Twenty-seven hours, Mrs. Block."

Or: "Gimme an hour's worth of 'smoke,' Andy," meaning, of course, the substitute for tobacco.

Or: "You blamed robber, what do you mean charging six hours for half-soling them shoes? If you was any good you could ha' done it in half the time."

Every individual in camp over the age of 13 was obliged to have an occupation. To a certain extent, this occupation was selective, but in the main it was to be determined by a board whose business it was to see that the man power was directed to the best advantage for all concerned. A camp tax was ordered. At the end of the week every citizen was required to pay into the common treasury two "hours." He could not "work out" this tax. It had to be paid in "cash." Out of the taxes so received, the school, the church, the "hospital" and the "government" were to be supported.

And so it came to pass that all manner of enterprises sprang into existence. Competition was not allowed. There could be but one millinery shop, one dressmaking establishment, one shoe and sandal factory, and so on.

Olga Obosky, as the proprietress of the millinery shop, earned no more than any one of her half-dozen assistants, and they were all paid by the "government." The same could be said of Madame Cereni-Amori, who conducted a school of music, and the great Joseppi, who graciously, even gladly, went into the tailoring business. Andrew Mott, one-time first officer on the Doraine, opened a "smoke" store and dispensed cured weed that Plattner authorized him to call "tobacco." The austere Mrs. Spofford decided to open a dressmaking shop!

With the adoption of the plan it was to become a punishable offense—indeed, it was to be classified as treason—for any resident of Trigger Island to "forage" for necessities. He could do what he pleased in respect to the nonessentials, but when it came to foodstuffs of any kind or description, he was guilty of a felony if he failed to turn all that he produced or secured into the general stores.

Ruth hurried over to the town hall bright and early on this snowy, gusty morning. The forenoon session of the school began punctually at 8:30 o'clock. She was there half an hour ahead of time to see that there was a roaring fire in the huge fireplace, and that the benches for the scholars were drawn up close to it. There were two teachers besides herself, and both of them were experienced "schoolmarmas." She taught the "infant class," comprising about a dozen tots. The three teachers took turn about in building the fires, arranging the benches and cleaning the crude blackboard.

There had been church services the night before, and the benches were all in use, arranged so that they faced the combination pulpit-rostrum-stage at the far end of the room. Tonight there was to be a general committee meeting to discuss the prospective financial scheme and the general election that was to take place the following week.

The Secret of Earning Big Money

How It Brought This Man $1000 in Thirty Days!

MY earnings during the past thirty days were more than $1,000" writes Warren Hartle of 4425 N. Robey Street, Chicago, whose picture you see on this page.

Yet previous to this he had worked for ten years in the railway mail service at salaries ranging from $900 to $1600 a year. What was the secret of his sudden rise from small pay to such magnificent earnings?

It was the same secret that has brought hundreds of others success, independence and money beyond their fondest dreams.

The stories of these men's amazing jumps to the big pay class read like fiction; but they are matters of record and can be verified by any one on request. Here are just a few examples, as told in the words of the men themselves:

"I had never earned more than $60 a month. Last week I cleared $306 and this week $218. You have done wonders for me." Geo. W. Kearns, 107 W. Park Place, Oklahoma City, Okla.

"My earnings for the past thirty days are $1,562 and I won Second Prize in March although I only worked two weeks during that month." C. W. Campbell, Greensburg, Pa.

"My earnings for March were over $1,000 and over $1,800 for the last six weeks, while last week my earnings were $356." L. P. Overstreet, Dallas, Texas.

And there are more—hundreds more. So quickly did these transformations from small pay to big money take place that they appear almost incredible. Almost over night these men left behind them the drudgery of low pay routine jobs for fascinating work, independence and rich financial rewards. It seems as if nothing short of the magic of an Aladdin's lamp could bring such sudden good fortune.

Perhaps you will say that these men represent those rare exceptions who seem destined to success—those favorites of fortune who every so often come to startle the average run of men with their whirlwind rise to the top.

But now comes the most amazing part of it all! What these men have done, hundreds of others have done, hundreds are doing today, and hundreds will do tomorrow. You may be one of them, for now the same opportunity that put these men into the big money class is open to you! You are going to read here and now, just as they read at one time, the secret of earning big money.

Then in the next five minutes you can take the same first step that brought to them such extraordinary success.

The Secret Disclosed

What is the secret of this amazing, quick success? What is the mysterious force that can lift men out of the rut and place them in the ranks of the big money-makers?

There is really no mystery about it. It is simply a matter of cold business fact. The "secret" is that the big money is in the selling end of business. And any man of normal intelligence and ambition can quickly become a Star Salesman.

paid Stars in Salesmanship are "born" to their calling—that the ability to sell is a natural gift. Then you will be surprised to learn that the men whose earnings have been quoted had no special qualifications for Salesmanship. In fact, hundreds of cases could be cited of men who had never had a day's experience in selling; they came from all walks of life, from all fields of work—they had been clerks, bookkeepers, mechanics, farmhands, etc., and today they are Star Salesmen, earning greater incomes than they had ever hoped to attain.

What Makes a $10,000 a Year Star Salesman?

If you had told these men that such brilliant success awaited them in the field of Selling they would have laughed at you—they would have told you that it was absurd to think of their becoming Salesmen, for they had never sold a dime's worth of goods in their lives!

Then what was it that suddenly transformed them into Star Salesmen? Ask them, and they will answer "the N. S. T. A." It was the N. S. T. A. that made them Master Salesmen and placed them in good selling positions through its Free Employment Service.

The National Salesmen's Training Association is an organization of top-notch Salesmen and Sales Managers that has fitted hundreds of men for big Selling positions—has taken them from obscure places in the world and made Star Salesmen of them—has made it amazingly easy for them to earn bigger money than they had ever dreamed possible. How?

There is a way of doing everything that makes success easy and certain. There is a Science of Salesmanship.

Once you know these fundamental rules and principles you are qualified to take your place in the ranks of the Star Salesmen. And you can learn the Secrets of Selling in your spare time at home—in the odd moments that you now pass fruitlessly. If you are earning less than $10,000 a year, then read the following carefully.

The Turning Point in Their Lives

The success of the men quoted above—and the success of hundreds of others like them—dates from the day they mailed a coupon—a coupon just like the one shown at the bottom of this page. This coupon brought them, just as it will bring to you, an amazing story of the way to quick success in Salesmanship. It brought them complete and irrefutable proof that they, too, no matter what they were doing or what their past experience had been, could quickly become Star Salesmen. It brought them full particulars of the wonderful system of Salesmanship Training and Free Employment Service of the National Salesmen's Training Association.

And you will see just how the Free Employment Service of the N. S. T. A. has helped others to splendid Selling positions and how it will do the same for you just as soon as you are qualified and ready.

Earned $524 in Two Weeks

I have never earned more than $60 a month. Last week I cleared $306 and this week $218. You have done wonders for me.—Geo. W. Kearns, 107 W. Park Place, Oklahoma City, Okla.

I Now Earn as High as $100 a Day

I took your course two years ago. Was earning $15 a week clerking. Am now selling many of the largest firms in the U. S. I have earned more than $100 in a day. You secured me my position. Our Sales Manager is a graduate of yours.—J. L. DeBolis, 1828 S. Crawford Av., Chicago, Ill.

Earns $1,562 in Thirty Days

My earnings for the past thirty days are $1,562.00 and I won Second Prize in March, although I only worked two weeks during that month.—C. W. Campbell, Greensburg, Pa.

Earned $1,800 in Six Weeks

As soon as I received a letter from you and your literature, I knew that I was on the right track, and very soon after I applied for a position as a Salesman to one of the firms whom you informed me were in need of a Salesman and to whom you had recommended me. As soon as they received my application, which was by mail, they wired me to come for an appointment, which I did, with the result being that I sold my services to them in about thirty minutes, took a territory in Illinois and Wisconsin, and made a success of it from the very first week.

From that time on I have been what might be termed as a "high pressure" Salesman, selling lines where nine out of ten Order Takers would fail. I have sold goods in a highly successful manner in nine or ten States, both North and South. My earnings for March were over $1000 and over $1800 for the last six weeks, while last week my earnings were $356.00. I travel eleven months out of the year, working five days each out of a rut where I was earning less than $1000 a year and showed me how to make a success.—J. P. Overstreet, Dallas, Texas.

DOWNTOWN PLACE

Blow Up the Building.

Safeblowers took more than 100 from the office of the Lindell Theater, a moving picture house, at 15 North Grand avenue, at 3:30 this morning, while policemen throughout the city were looking for the two men who held up the assistant manager of the Grand Opera House a large vaudeville theater at 1
Market street, in his office at 10:30 last night, while the show was in progress, and took about $4800.

The explosion at the Lindell Theater was heard by two policemen Grand and Sullivan avenues, more than a block away. They found the safe torn open, apparently by explosion of nitroglycerin, and found on the floor a bag containing $1035.24, which the robbers had recently dropped in their haste to leave. There was $30 in a compartment of the safe.

The receipts of the Grand-Fla-rant Theater, as well as those of Lindell Theater, were kept in a Lindell safe, and J. Reeves Es-singer, manager of the house, reported that the amount in the safe was about $2866, so that something more than $300 was taken. The robbers entered the theater by a door, and broke open an inner door to get into the office. The explosion shattered glass in the theater entrance. A hammer, chisel and pry were left by the robbers in the safe.

Two Men Hold Up Official.
The Grand Opera House robbers carried automatic pistols and played a one-ounce bottle, which they declared contained nitroglycerin, in threatening to blow up the building, and the assistant manager if he should refuse to open the safe for them. The bottle, which men left behind them, was found to contain sweet spirits of niter.
The office of the Grand is on the second floor of the building, at Market street front, and is directly above the ticket seller's cage in lobby. It is the nightly custom to take the ticket seller's receipts to the office at 9 o'clock and keep them in the safe. A policeman is ordered to call at the theater at 10 time every night, and to see money put away. This custom followed last night, and the policeman left when the assistant manager, Elmer E. Fritz, had locked the money.

Official Ordered Into Office.
About 10:20 Fritz started to the office. He later told the police that, as he stepped into the lobby which is also one of the exits from the balcony, two men confronted him, and displaying automatic pistols ordered him to get back into the office.

"One of the men was red-headed," Fritz said, "and the other one was tall. Put it on him. Red-headed Red" showed his pistol against Fritz and told him to get back into the office and make no noise. When Fritz got into the office, he told me open the safe. I said I didn't have the combination. You're a jerk. We've been watching you you know how to get that safe open. I'll give you five seconds to open the safe. . . .

"Then Red" hit me on the head with the butt of his pistol. Red other fellow said, 'Don't kill Red' and 'Red' said he would kill me if I didn't get the safe open.
I opened the outside door, and the other fellow opened the inside door, and I didn't have the combination. . . .
